Reilly Freed in Mother's Murder As Suppressed Evidence Is Bared

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

Special to The New York Times

LITCHFIELD, Conn., Nov. 24—Charges against Peter A. Reilly in the murder of his mother were dropped here today after the new State's Attorney announced that he had discovered evidence in the files of his predecessor that tended to clear the youth.

"I believe, in the best interest of justice, that the case should be dismissed," Judge Simon S. Cohen said at a pretrial hearing in Litchfield County Superior Court here after the State's Attorney, Dennis Santore, announced his discovery of evidence more than three years old. The evidence placed the youth miles from the scene of the murder at the time it was committed.

The evidence was not unlike that introduced by Mr. Reilly's attorney at previous court hearings, but it took on added importance because of the strong implications of official misconduct its discovery raised. Neither Judge Cohen nor attorneys for both sides, however, raised that issue today.

Mr. Santore became the prosecutor for this rural hill county on Nov. 5, replacing John F. Bianchi, who died of a heart attack earlier this year.

Mr. Reilly, who was 18 years old on the night of Sept. 28, 1973, when his mother was slashed, stomped and beaten to death in a cottage they shared in nearby Canaan, maintained his usual expressionless demeanor throughout the hearing as a courtroom packed with his supporters gasped, cried and congratulated one another.

Arthur Miller, the playwright, was the only one in the courtroom who appeard more overcome by anger at Mr. Santore's predecessor than by the joy of vindication. Mr. Miller became convinced after the youth's trial and conviction in 1974 that Mr. Reilly had been railroaded to jail, and he took up his cause, helping to focus nationwide attention on the case.

Miller Urges Investigation

"This wasn't just a miscarriage of justice—that man got up in court and said publicly that there was no additional evidence in his files," Mr. Miller said, referring to Mr. Bianchi. "I don't call that a miscarriage of justice. What do you call it? There ought to be an investigation."

Mr. Santore, who maintained a dour expression throughout the day's proceedings, declined to discuss the case.

Left unanswered was the question of whether there would be an investigation

TRUDEAU GIVES PLEA FOR CANADIAN UNITY; HINTS BID TO QUEBEC

His Position Shaken by Election, He Concedes Provincial Powers May Have to Be Widened

By ROBERT TRUMBULL

Special to The New York Times

OTTAWA, Nov. 24—Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, his position shaken by the overwhelming victory of the separatist party in the Quebec provincial elections last week, appealed to Canadians tonight for a renewal of national unity.

Mr. Trudeau insisted in a television and radio address that the aspirations of the five million French-speaking Canadians in Quebec could be satisfied within the federal framework. He conceded, however, that some changes in the relationship between that province and the central Government, through the enhancement of provincial powers, might be required.

Quebec has been asking for local authority over immigration, television licensing and other activities affecting the linguistic and cultural makeup of the province.

Speaks in Two Languages

René Lévesque, the leader of the Parti Québécois, which favors independence for the province, is scheduled to take over as Quebec's Premier tomorrow from Robert Bourassa, of Mr. Trudeau's Liberal Party. Mr. Bourassa lost his own legislative seat from a Montreal constituency in the election on Nov. 15.

The Prime Minister made two tapes of his speech, one in English and one in French, for simultaneous broadcasting on the separate English and French services of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Government-supported radio and television network.

"History created this country from the meeting of two realities, the French and the English," Mr. Trudeau said. "This coming together, though at times difficult to accept and hard to practice, has become the fabric of our life as a nation, the source of our individuality, the very cornerstone of our identity as a people."

He characterized the Quebec election as "a cause of great concern," adding that "it has posed many questions to all Canadians."

Mr. Trudeau, who comes from Montreal and identifies himself as a French Canadian, again maintained that the heavy vote for the Parti Québécois gave Mr. Lévesque a mandate to govern the province but not to seek its separation

MAJOR QUAKE STRIKES EASTERN TURKEY AREA; TOLL MAY REACH 3,000

BUSH WILL QUIT C.I.A. ON INAUGURATION DAY

Replaced Colby in Job Last January When Agency Was Under Fire

By DAVID BINDER

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—George W. Bush announced today that he was resigning as Director of Central Intelligence effective Jan. 20, the day President Ford will leave office.

A Texas oil millionaire and a former Republican leader, Mr. Bush took over the Central Intelligence Agency last Jan. 30, replacing William E. Colby at a time when the agency's morale was at a low point after criticism by Congress and the press.

There was no immediate reaction from President-elect Jimmy Carter, who previously expressed a liking and respect for Mr. Bush. Nor was there any comment by the White House.

People close to Mr. Carter said today in Plains, Ga., that they expected the new President to appoint as the new director someone he had known for a long time.

Mr. Bush spent six hours with Mr. Carter last Friday, giving the President-elect an intelligence briefing on developments around the world and also describing the current state of the United States intelligence community.

According to White House officials, the 52-year-old intelligence chief discussed his resignation plans with President Ford before journeying to Plains and informed him of his announcement early this morning. Mr. Bush called Mr. Carter last night to tell him that he was resigning.

The White House said that Mr. Bush had not yet submitted his resignation in writing. The announcement was distributed by the C.I.A. press office.

Tremor, Worst in Anatolian Fault Zone Since 1939, Is Felt in Soviet Armenia

By The Associated Press

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Nov. 24—A major earthquake struck a mountainous area of eastern Turkey today, and the Government said the death toll could be at least 3,000.

First reports quoted official sources as having said that at least 574 had been killed near the Soviet and Iranian borders, but the Defense Ministry said it appeared that 3,000 could be dead in one township alone.

"I hope that these figures are exaggerated," Defense Minister Ferit Melen said. He added that precise figures were difficult to obtain because of poor communications.

The earthquake struck at 2:45 P.M. (7:25 A.M. New York time) near Mount Ararat in Van Province. The Kandilli observatory in Istanbul said the quake had a magnitude of 7.9 on the Richter scale, describing it as the worst to strike Turkey since another 7.9 tremor that killed 30,000 people in 1939 in the Erzincan area.

No Casualties Reported in Soviet

Today's quake was also felt in the Armenian Republic of the Soviet Union, but no casualties or serious destruction was reported from there.

The deputy governor of Van Province placed the epicenter of the quake near the northeast shore of Lake Van, listing 500 dead in the town of Muradiye, 64 at Ercis, to the west, and 10 at Diyadin, to the north.

In Muradiye, "about 95 per cent of the buildings have been leveled," the deputy governor, Burhan Yavus Yilmaz, said in a broadcast over Turkey's national radio. "There is no electricity. It's snowing and the temperature is 11 below zero [14 degrees Fahrenheit]. We are rushing tents and bread."

Mr. Yilmaz said soldiers being sent in as rescue workers were hampered by a gasoline shortage. The quake destroyed Muradiye's post office and knocked out telephone communications in the area.

In Ankara, Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said after a Cabinet meeting that the Government was receiving reports of "sorrowful destruction" from the stricken area.

Radio and television interrupted regular programming and played classical music in mourning for the victims.

The stricken area lies on the Anatolian fault, a rift in the earth's crust that is

At the first Thanksgiving the Pilgrims and the Wampanoag Indians feasted together in friendship, as depicted in this painting. The Wampanoags and a growing number of other tribes are now suing to recover their ancestral lands.

Thanksgiving 355 Years Later: Indians Sue for Land

By JOHN KIFNER

Special to The New York Times

MASHPEE, Mass., Nov. 24—When the Pilgrims sat down to their first Thanksgiving in New England 355 years ago, Massasoit, the leader of the Wampanoag Indians, and 90 of his braves sat among them and provided five deer for the feast. The festival celebrated not only survival through the first harsh winter and the gathering of the harvest, but also the friendship and help of the Indians.

Now remnants of the tribe have filed a lawsuit in Federal District Court that has cast doubt on the ownership of all the land in this little Cape Cod town and has brought its booming real estate and second-home development business, its economic lifeblood, to a sudden halt.

The lawsuit, based on the Indian Nonintercourse Act of 1780, which ordered that all land dealings with Indian tribes must be approved by Congress, is part of a general stirring of activity by New England's long-forgotten Indian tribes.

In Maine, the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot tribes have filed a claim under the Nonintercourse Act to two-thirds of the state that has threatened the ability of towns to raise money through bond issues. A similar suit has been filed by the Narragansett Indians in Rhode Island, and suits are pending in other states. In Vermont, the Abnaki Indians, who live mostly around Swanton in the far northwest, have asked for unlimited hunting and fishing rights and Gov. Thomas P. Salmon is reportedly preparing to grant them formal tribal status, making them eligible for Federal grants.

On Martha's Vineyard, another branch of the Wampanoag tribe has filed a suit for the town common lands in Gay Head, including the area's famous cliffs, and the residents may vote at a special town meeting to turn them over to the tribe. At stake here, too, are potential Federal grants, for the tribe needs a land base to be eligible for Federal Indian programs.

The upsurge of activity here is a part of the national stirring of Indian pride and militancy in recent years. The lawsuits have been brought by lawyers from the Native American Rights Fund, based in Colorado. Scrawled across a battered shack on the Penobscot Reservation in Maine is the slogan "Wounded Knee." Some of the younger Indians have taken to wearing headbands.

Steel Prices Raised By 2 Big Producers; U.S. Orders Inquiry

By GENE SMITH

Two major steelmakers announced yesterday that they would raise the price of sheet steel—used by the automobile, appliance and construction industries—by about 6 percent on Dec. 1.

The move by the National Steel Corporation, the nation's fourth largest steelmaker, and the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, the seventh largest producer, caught the industry by surprise. It came in a weak steel market a little over three months after major steelmakers had to rescind a 4.5 percent price increase because one company resisted it. It also came at a time when steel production is at low levels.

National Steel's announcement was followed several hours later by Jones & Laughlin. Thirty minutes after National's move, the Council on Wage and Price Stability issued a sharply worded statement in which it said it was beginning an immediate study of the action. The council, which does not have any power to roll back prices, said it was asking National to provide production, cost, profit and expected sales data.

Both companies emphasized that the increases were being made on base listed prices. It is common knowledge that under present weak market conditions practically no sales are being made at the list prices.

The announcement of the increase

Swiss Are Shaken by Spy Case Involving General and W

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

BERN, Nov. 19—If the watches began to tell the wrong time or the Swiss franc took a nosedive, the effect on national morale could not have been more crushing. Even the more conservative newspapers do not shy from comparisons with Watergate, and a demand for the introduction of the death penalty has been heard in Parliament.

A Swiss general and his wife stand accused of having betrayed the highest secrets of their country to the Soviet Union. It has never happened before, and, if one is to judge by the national reaction since the news was announced last August, no Swiss imagined it ever could happen here.

Moreover, even if it could have been conceived as imaginable, no one would have cast 66-year-old Brig. Gen. Jean-Louis Jeanmaire in the role of Soviet spy. And how, the Swiss are clamoring to know, could this hard-drinking, loud-talking superpatriot have handed military secrets to his Russian contacts not once or twice but steadily for 14 years in so meticulous and security-conscious a neutral country?

Even his son, the Jeanmaires' only child, a 29-year-old bank clerk at Geneva airport, is asking himself those questions. After all, he mused over a Coca-Cola in a Lausanne cafe, was not one of his father's proudest possessions, always in his wallet and often shown, a place card from a dinner in 1969 signed by the guest of honor, Gen. William C. Westmoreland?

'He Was Trapped'

Jean-Marc Jeanmaire recalled that all his life he heard his father warn of the Soviet Union and thunder against Communism. He does not think that his father was striking a pose. But he no longer defends his father against the accusations.

"He was trapped at one of these diplomatic cocktails," he said. "They made him take a few drinks too much, as often happens, and maybe he said something he shouldn't. Then he was in their power. He was trapped."

Nor does he deny the possibility of his mother's guilt. "If they say so, something might have happened," he said. "The only thing we can do is wait and see."

The younger Jeanmaire attaches no significance to the unreported fact that his 60-year-old mother was born in the Crimea in the year before the Russian revolution. He said both her parents were Swiss who had gone there to allow her father to take a job as a teacher of French. They returned to Switzerland the year after the revolution.

If General Jeanmaire seems an unlikely Soviet spy, his son heightens the improbability of the image. Jean-Marc Jeanmaire is an enthusiastic admirer of the United States. He proudly displays his membership card in a group called the Suisse-U.S.A. Association. He reads U.S. News & World Report and used to be a member of the American National Hot Rod Association. He fires target practice with his M-1 rifle and is looking for a World War II jeep to buy as a hobby.

L'Illustré S.A.
Brig. Gen. Jean-Louis Jeanmaire

A Disappointing Career

The younger Jeanmaire's speculation about his father's motives for his alleged espionage is consistent with the only word on the subject that has been put out by the Government. The Federal Attorney, Rudolf Gerber, offered the following last month as a "preliminary conclusion" of the judicial inquiry:

"Inability to overcome disappointment over a career that did not live up to expectations and over his assignment to civil defense branch. In such frustration, the interest of the Russians was flattering and Jeanmaire let himself be maneuvered into a position of dependence."

The inquiry preparatory to a military trial is continuing, with General Jeanmaire in solitary but comfortable confinement in a Bern prison and his wife, Marie-Louise, at liberty in their Lausanne apartment. Partly paralyzed since a stroke three years ago, she has not been detained. The maximum penalty facing the general is 20 years in prison.

The facts that have been made public are as sparse as they are banal. They were summarized last month by Justice and Police Minister Kurt Furgler before Parliament.

In 1959 or 1960, General Jeanmaire, then a colonel in the civil defense branch, made the acquaintance of the Soviet military attaché. They became friends. The Russian visited the Jeanmaires repeatedly and persuaded the general progressively to give him confidential information and finally military documents.

Before he was reassigned in 1964, he passed the contact on to his assistant, a succession that was continued until the general's retirement at the end of last year. Mr. Furgler said all of General Jeanmaire's Soviet contacts had been identified as members of military intelligence.

Reported Rewards Meager

The Justice Minister said that General Jeanmaire had passed on information, including "most secret documents," not only on his own branch of service but also on the organization of Swiss forces in general, national defense plans and, most important, war mobilization plans. He also provided information on his fellow officers and high political personalities as to their competence, character and family circumstances.

The investigators have not apparently found evidence of financial rewards. It is alleged that the Jeanmaires received a television set, some bottles of alcohol and souvenir jewelry featuring the hammer and sickle. Such tiepins and cuff links are trinkets Soviet diplomats routinely present to visitors.

Nothing changed, at least outwardly, in the Jeanmaires' lower-middle-class way of life. They remained in the modest four-room apartment near the center of Lausanne, surrounded by the furniture they bought when they were married in 1943. The general worked in Bern and was home only on weekends.

Following an old tradition of French Switzerland, he liked to spend Saturday mornings doing the family marketing and would follow this with a few drinks at the Cafe des Philosophes in the old part of town. Then he would return to the apartment, situated on the Avenue of the Federal Tribunal, and rarely go out again until Monday morning's return to Bern.

Once a month, perhaps, the shopping husbands would meet Saturday afternoon and, following local tradition, would stroll into the woods carrying some drink and meat for barbecuing. The general liked to put on his uniform for such occasions and seemed to enjoy the patriotic songs that form part of the tradition. The Swiss flag would sometimes be hoisted. He was the only military man of the group, which included a butcher and a bartender.

General Jeanmaire watched football games and Sunday mass on television and read books on military subjects. "He hasn't been to a cinema since 'The Longest Day' first came out," his son said.

Officers Express Astonishment

Several of his fellow officers, in an army in which all officers appear to know each other, expressed astonishment in conversations—astonishment both that a Swiss general could have been a spy and that that general should have been Jean-Louis Jeanmaire.

They described the general as too hard-drinking and vulgarly talkative by far, and not considered a man with whom anyone cared to discuss serious or interesting subjects. "Primitive," "loudmouth" and "teller of stupid jokes" are phrases that recurred in assessments.

U.N. Backs Palestinians on Issue Of Rights in Israel and Own State

By PETER GROSE
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 24—The General Assembly formally proclaimed today the right of Palestinian Arab refugees to establish their own state and to reclaim their former homes and properties in what has become the state of Israel.

A long-debated resolution endorsed an expansive definition of Palestinian rights, and called for their rapid restoration even before the other elements of a peace settlement were concluded.

In effect, the Assembly's third-world majority sought to give stature and precision to the Arab negotiating position on an issue that had previously been left vague and undefined. An attempt to take similar action last June in the Security Council was prevented only by a United States veto.

Foremost among the "legitimate and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people," the report approved by the Assembly said, was the right "to return to their homes and property and to achieve self-determination, national independence and sovereignty."

Israelis contended that an unqualified right to return would lead to the dismantling of the Israeli state by creating an overwhelming fifth column of hostile Arab residents. Practical implementation would also be overwhelming, for much of the land left by Arab refugees after 1948 has been transformed through industrial and agricultural development.

The report of the 20-member Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, as it is formally called, was approved by 90 member states. The United States cast one of the 16 opposing votes and there were 30 abstentions.

Israelis Criticize P.L.O. Role

This balance—with about a third of the United Nations membership, including the United States, most of Western Europe and much of Latin America, refusing to support seemingly anti-Israeli measures—has remained fairly consistent throughout this session of the General Assembly.

The vote came after two weeks of uneventful debate on Palestinian issues in which representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization often took the rostrum. Yesterday, the Assembly demanded that Israel return Gaza Palestinians to their United Nations-run refugee camps in the occupied Gaza Strip.

Israeli speakers in the debate regularly criticized the detailed P.L.O. participation in the drafting of the committee report over the past year. In common with the United States and many delegations that nevertheless cast reluctant approving votes, the Israelis charged that the committee was unbalanced and biased—only four of the 20 members were countries that maintain diplomatic relations with Israel.

The Assembly endorsed the committee's recommendation that refugees displaced in the 1967 war have the right to reclaim their homes immediately, without reference "to any other condition."

For the more complicated matter of refugees from the earlier period, 1948, when Israel was established, to 1967, the Assembly asked that the United Nations start making "necessary arrangements" with the P.L.O. and the states involved for those refugees who wish to exercise the right of return. Those who do not choose to return "should be paid just and equitable compensation."

Israelis have long been more receptive to the principle of compensation for lost properties, in the context of a peace agreement and provided that Jewish refugees from Arab states would also be compensated, a point that the Arabs have never accepted.

The committee called on the Security Council to arrange for Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied territories by June 1, 1977, without any reference to previous Security Council resolutions stipulating the need for Arab-Israeli negotiations to bring about such a withdrawal.

Arab leaders have long stated two general conditions for reaching a Middle East settlement: total Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories and restoration of the rights of the Palestinians. But they rarely spell out exactly what these rights are alleged to be.

The Assembly's formulation was sweeping, including the right to a state of their own, a right that, as Israeli speakers noted, is denied to many other national communities in the Middle East and other regions of the world.

"The General Assembly has been hijacked by a group of Arab extremists," said the chief Israeli delegate, Chaim Herzog.

To many politicians, the bill could lead to the break-up of Britain. But nationalists in Scotland and Wales condemned the speech as not going far enough. The Scottish National Party was especially bitter that no mention was made of a Scottish share in the North Sea oil being pumped ashore in Scotland.

The Queen said the Government would continue its attack on inflation, working closely with trade unions and employers. Priority will be given to manufacturing industries. There was no mention of any tough austerity measures to satisfy the International Monetary Fund, to which Britain has applied for a loan. But a tough emergency budget is expected in a few weeks.

Israelis Seek Christian-Held Lebanon Border Zone

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Nov. 24—Israeli officials are promoting the idea that the best way to avert a confrontation between Israeli and Syrian forces at the Lebanese border would be the creation of a buffer zone patrolled by Lebanese forces responsible to President Elias Sarkis.

The idea, which is being fostered by officials here, would require the consent of Damascus because Syrians form the vast bulk of the Arab peacekeeping force that is in control of most of Lebanon.

Officials of the Foreign and Defense Ministries said today that the border was quiet and that there were no signs of major movements by the Syrians to southern Lebanon, which has a winding 80-mile fenced border with Israel. In recent days, as Syrians have gradually moved in to impose order in the major warring areas in Lebanon, the Israelis have been concerned about Syrian movements toward the frontier.

On at least two occasions, the Israelis have expressed caution to Damascus, with the United States acting as intermediary. The most recent warning to the Syrians was after rocket shells had been fired from Lebanon at the Israeli town of Nahariya, causing some property damage.

Israelis in Border Display

In the last two days, the Israelis have bolstered their military forces at the border and have sought to make this display of strength a further form of caution to the Syrians. In addition, Israeli officials have said that the Syrians, since they now control Lebanon, would be responsible for preventing incidents such as the shelling of Nahariya, which presumably was by Palestinian guerrillas.

Since the Syrians intervened some months ago in the Lebanese conflict, Israel has said that it would take no military counteraction so long as the Syrians did not cross what is called "the red line."

While not publicly defined, the line has been construed to mean no advance by Syrian forces to the south of the Litani River, which flows into the Mediterranean five miles north of Tyre.

Officials here also say that the red line is not merely geographic but refers as well to "the nature and character" of any military movement near the Israeli border. There has been speculation that Israel would be agreeable to a movement by a small number of Syrians into Tyre to bring the area under control but only if the Syrians promised to ban the return of Palestinian guerrillas to southern Lebanon, an area the guerrillas used in the past to organize raids across the border into Israel.

All along, the Israelis said they would not tolerate a return of the Palestinians to southern Lebanon, a position reiterated yesterday by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

for the Syrians to occupy the border area and thereby be able to prevent any Palestinian raids, just as they are able to do in the Golan Heights area. In Golan, Palestinian guerrilla units are not permitted near the border between Syria and Israel.

American officials, in private comments, also express irritation with Israeli press reports that the United States was relaying the Israeli warnings to Syria.

One official said that the United States was in active consultation with Syria and Israel and was urging both sides to show restraint.

Some officials are speculating that the rash of comments from Israel about the situation in Lebanon was prompted by political rivalry between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Defense Minister Shimon Peres, contenders in parliamentary elections next year.

U.S. Seeks to Calm Israel

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—State Department officials say they are less concerned than Israel that the recent Syrian moves in Lebanon—in particular developments in southern Lebanon near the Israeli border—pose a serious danger to stability in the area.

In recent days, Israelis here and in Jerusalem have been pressing Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and other officials to warn the Syrians that the Israelis will not permit a major Syrian advance across the Litani River.

American officials, who have often differed with Israel about Syrian behavior, usually taking a more relaxed view of Syrian intentions than do the Israelis, have expressed resentment at what they regard as Israeli attempts to leave an impression that Washington agrees with their concern.

Mr. Kissinger invited Simcha Dinitz, the Israeli Ambassador, to discuss the situation yesterday morning before Mr. Kissinger flew to Acapulco, Mexico, for a Thanksgiving rest before attending the inauguration of the new Mexican President in Mexico City next week.

In the discussion, Mr. Kissinger is understood to have told Mr. Dinitz that Israel cannot have it both ways—it cannot issue warnings to deter Syrian troop movements to the region of the Israeli border and at the same time hold the Syrians responsible for military actions that Palestinian groups might undertake near the border.

In the American view, it might be better

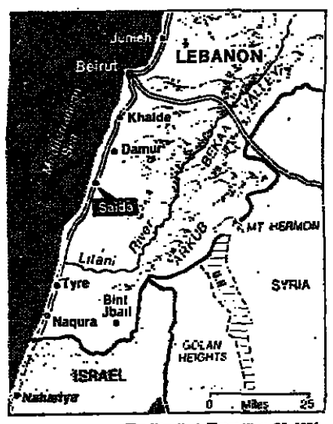
The paper said that a restoration of peace in Lebanon "remains more urgent than dealing with developments in south Lebanon." It added:

"The situation in south Lebanon is an urgent pan-Arab concern. We must not allow ourselves to be dragged into the Zionist game, which seeks to escalate tension in the region."



The New York Times/Nov. 25, 1976

Syrian troops were reported to have stopped near Saida.

The newspaper, which reflects the views of the government of President Hafez al-Assad, asserted that Israel was trying to divert the attention of the peacekeeping force from its mission. But there was no suggestion that Syria was planning to advance its forces closer to the Israeli border in response to the reported Israeli military movements.

In Beirut, Raymond Edde, a prominent Christian political figure, said he believed that Israel was planning to invade southern Lebanon with a view toward forcing the establishment there of a United Nations truce zone.

Mr. Edde said he felt Israel wanted to do this to strengthen its position before agreeing to enter a new round of negotiations with the Arab nations toward an overall settlement of the Middle East conflict.

Shelling of Border Towns

Beirut newspapers today reported the continuance of sporadic shelling of towns held by leftist-Moslem and Palestinian forces near the Israeli border.

The leftist-Palestinian forces control the town of Bint Jbail, a few miles from the frontier.

Lebanese Christian rightist forces have established a military security belt along the border, separating Israel from the leftists and the Palestinians. There have been no recent attempts by either the leftist-Palestinian forces or the rightist Christians to carry out attacks that would change the military situation on the Lebanese side of the border.

3 RHODESIA AIRFIELDS REPORTED BEING BUILT

New Sites Would Provide Room to Land More Transports—Reasons Still Unclear

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP)—Rhodesia is reportedly building three airfields capable of handling transport planes even as discussions continue in Geneva on proposals to turn over control of the white-ruled nation to its black majority.

This report was made available by white Rhodesian sources in Geneva last week. Officials in Britain, which is presiding over the conference, and in Washington said in response to inquiries that they knew nothing about such airfield construction.

But the Rhodesians at the Geneva talks said the fields were being built at Hartley 70 miles southwest of Salisbury, at Buffalo Range, in the southeast near Mozambique, where black guerrillas have bases, and in the Wankie coalfield area in the west. That is near the Caprivi strip of South-West Africa, where minor guerrilla actions have taken place.

In addition, the Rhodesians said, the runway of their country's major air training base at Gwelo is being extended to accommodate larger planes.

Speculation on Purposes

What the purpose of such preparations might be was not made clear. But some Western diplomats said that the work might be under way because Rhodesia hopes it will get aid from the West in case the Geneva talks collapse or Cuban or other foreign troops intervene on the side of the guerrillas.

Another possibility, the diplomats suggested, is that the Rhodesian Government may feel contingency planning requires the availability of more airfields in the event of a need to evacuate some of the country's 270,000 whites.

One further possible explanation was offered by South African sources who said the Rhodesians might be preparing for a period after black majority rule starts, when huge international investment and material aid may begin.

Smith Statement Recalled

The Rhodesian informants in Geneva talked about airfields before Prime Minister Ian D. Smith said in a broadcast interview in Salisbury last Friday that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had expressed a belief to him that Rhodesia would get "more sympathy and aid from the free world" including military supplies if black nationalists caused the Geneva conference to collapse.

Mr. Kissinger said the next day that there was "no possibility" that the United States would sell arms to the white Rhodesian Government if the Geneva talks failed.

The Rhodesian sources said that publications in their country were prohibited from mentioning the airfield work.

VIEWS OF BLACKS DIFFER ON NEW PLAN IN RHODESIA

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Nov. 24—Black nationalist leaders were unable today to agree on a joint response to the latest British effort to find a compromise formula on a date for independence under black rule.

Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe have insisted throughout the four-week conference that Britain fix a firm date for formally ending Rhodesia's colonial status and for the transfer of rule from the rebel white minority Government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith to the black majority. They want Dec. 1, 1977.

Mr. Nkomo is reported by some black sources as ready to make a positive reply to the compromise that seeks to assure that the transfer will take place no later than March 1, 1978, while avoiding a total commitment at this early stage of the conference. However, the sources say that Mr. Mugabe, the political spokesman for one faction of the guerrilla forces fighting the Smith Government, has strong reservations.

The two leaders are to resume discussions tomorrow on a response concerning the formula advanced yesterday by Ivor Richard of Britain, the conference chairman.

Wang, Rival for Power in China, Is Accused of Factional Strife

PEKING, Nov. 24 (Reuters)—Wang Hung-wen, the Shanghai radical once considered a likely successor to Mao Tse-tung as leader of the Chinese Communist Party, was accused today in the Peking newspaper Jenmin Jih Pao of stirring up political strife in the southeastern city of Hangchow.

Hangchow, a lakeside resort, was the site last year of factional violence that was put down by the army. There were rumors that at one point Mr. Wang tried to settle the dispute but failed.

A commentary in Jenmin Jih Pao charged that Mr. Wang, who has been purged with three other leading "radicals," had engaged in factionalism. It said he hoped that by disrupting factories in Hangchow "a noose" would be put around the necks of provincial administrators who opposed the radicals.

Another article in the Peking paper accused Mr. Wang of being wasteful with money. It charged that during a three-month period in Shanghai last year, Mr. Wang spent more than an ordinary worker received in 30 years.

Rhodesia Air Force In on Fightin

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Nov. 24 (UPI)—Rhodesia has sent its air force into action against Mozambican Government positions in response to what it called "unprovoked aggression" against its troops hunting guerrillas in Rhodesia, the military command announced today.

This was the first time Rhodesia has acknowledged the use of aircraft against Mozambican troops in the growing border conflict. It did not say when the engagements against Frelimo, the Government party, took place.

The communiqué said:

"Security force headquarters announce that in another incident of unprovoked aggression on the eastern border, Frelimo have fired on security forces operating in Rhodesia.

"The security forces were subjected to heavy mortar and machine-gun fire. Appropriate retaliatory measures were taken, including the use of aircraft, and it is known that Frelimo suffered a number of casualties. There were no security force casualties."

Over the last week, the Mozambican radio has reported Rhodesian incursions and heavy battles between its troops and invaders. Until now, Rhodesia had not officially commented on these reports.

One battle, according to Mozambique, occurred at a camp at Mavue, a mile inside Mozambique, and one further south in the Pafuri area near the junction of Rhodesia, Mozambique and South Africa.

Earlier this month, Rhodesia announced that its troops had carried out a thre sweep in Mozambique to forestall a fensive against Rhodesia planned Mozambique-based guerrillas.

Military officials say the guerrillas sent up to 2,000 men into Rhodes an offensive timed to coincide wi majority-rule conference in Geneva

So far this month, the Rhodesia they have killed 187 guerrillas in sia—more than in all of 1975. The toll for the year stands at least guerrillas and 180 members of the ty forces. Since the war began in ber 1972, official figures say Rh troops have slain at least 2,083 ins while losing 180 of their own men

London Observer: How U.S. Oil Outfit Came to the Rescue

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE JR.
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Nov. 24—What started as a vague idea over dinner at a London restaurant 12 days ago became a reality today with the formal announcement that an American oil company, Atlantic Richfield, was acquiring a 90 per cent interest in The Observer, one of Britain's most prestigious, and troubled, newspapers.

At a news conference today, the paper's trustees said the purpose of the move was to "preserve the editorial independence and distinctive character of The Observer." Their statement said that the oil company people had agreed, as a condition of the sale, to do "their utmost to maintain the editorial traditions and journalistic standards of The Observer."

The agreement, which stunned London's journalistic community, contained several unusual elements. It had an odd, almost accidental, beginning. It involved a whirlwind courtship that disappointed other suitors for The Observer's hand. And, according to statements at the news conference, no money is actually going to change hands.

But perhaps the deal's most interesting aspects are the calculations of the two main figures involved. One is David Astor, the paper's former editor, who has relinquished 90 percent of his family's holdings to an American company he hardly knows in the hope that this will insure the paper's survival. The other is Robert O. Anderson, the Atlantic Richfield board chairman, who has no newspaper experience but appears willing to bet some of his company's money on the proposition that he can save a faltering paper without, however, making radical changes in its character.

The essence of the deal, as spelled out this morning, is this: Atlantic Richfield will, through a subsidiary company it is creating for this purpose alone, acquire 90 percent of the shares now held in trust for Mr. Astor's six children. In exchange, the company will invest an undisclosed amount of money in the paper for an undisclosed period of time.

Both sides in the bargain insisted that there was no cause to fear that The Observer would become a servant of the oil company's worldwide business interests. A separate statement released by Atlantic Richfield said that "no changes will be made in the newspaper's editorial policy," and that "no changes are planned in existing personnel."

For its part, The Observer's management seemed to feel the paper would have a better chance of maintaining its character under an arrangement with an outside investor than it would had it been absorbed by any one of several large newspaper chains that had also made serious bids.

Sources close to The Observer said that while the act of relinquishing 90 percent of the stock could be a wrench to some family members, the shares had not yielded dividends for years, and indeed faced further depletion if The Observer continued to lose large sums of money.

As for Atlantic Richfield, Douglass Cater, a director of the Aspen Institute of Humanistic Studies in Colorado and a friend of Mr. Anderson, said at the news conference that he regarded Mr. Anderson as "a business statesman of the first order" with a "great interest" in the media generally and a "deep commitment" to preserving The Observer's professional standards.

The origin of the deal was as surprising as the arrangement itself. It involved two old friends. One was Mr. Cater, a respected figure in the journalistic world who had served as Washington editor of The Reporter magazine in the 1950's a a special assistant to President L B. Johnson in the 1960's. He has Mr. Anderson for 10 years. Mr. An is chairman of the institute, wh devoted to bringing busine scholars and other professionals to to discuss a wide range of issues.

The other was Kenneth Harris, ing feature writer for The Obser and Mr. Cater had been friends Mr. Harris was The Observer's W ton correspondent 20 years a Nov.12 they dined at Rules, a London restaurant of Mr. Cater's discussed the paper's problems; the time the meal was over Mr had decided to see whether his Mr. Anderson was interested in the problems.

Pattern of Life in Saudi Arabia Is Becoming Swifter and More Complex Under Khal

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

JIDDA, Saudi Arabia—The pattern of life has been changing in this wealthy desert kingdom since King Khalid succeeded his murdered brother, King Faisal, last year. It has grown more complex, more swift, in some ways more harsh.

King Faisal was the pivot of the Saudi state, but now, 28 months after his death, King Khalid remains content to leave the day-to-day running of the kingdom to his own deputy, Crown Prince Fahd. Saudi technocrats have come more to the fore, though their power is limited.

Military life is growing more complex. A first battalion of National Guardsmen, who formerly bounced around in trucks, has completed an American-run program that is designed to transform it into modern mechanized light infantry, equipped with armored cars.

Diplomacy, notably cautious under Faisal, has become sometimes brisk. The Saudi Government summoned Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, in October and whisked him by plane from Lebanon to Riyadh, the Saudi royal capital, for high-level talks about the Lebanese civil war.

Development Effort Accelerates

Accelerated development efforts have heated up the economy, spurring painful inflation, disrupting shipping and spreading such urban ills as traffic jams.

While these changes have been in train, the nation's commanding stature in the world oil industry, the basis of Saudi wealth and power, has been growing further. The discovery of new oilfields was announced earlier this year. Oil revenues of $30 billion are expected this year, up from 1975. The Government is preparing for the 100 percent takeover of the Arabian American Oil Company, the main operating company in Saudi Arabia.

Directly or indirectly, oil wealth is what has led to the manifold changes, along with the fact that Khalid's estimate of the nation's capacity to absorb change is higher than that of the conservative Faisal. The Khalid Government is showing a mixture of confidence, caution and caginess in confronting change and complexity in many spheres at once.

"In Saudi Arabia we are facing a unique situation; we must create our own theory of development," the Finance Minister, Sheik Muhammad Aba al-Khail, said to an interviewer in Riyadh, which lies inland from this Red Sea port.

On a more cautious note, he added, "We know our experience is limited, but we are trying to do our best."

Long a Wielder of Arms and Power

Over the centuries the Saudi royal family, known as the House of Saud, has had much practice in wielding arms and power across the arid, sparsely inhabited face of the Arabian Peninsula.

All told there are now perhaps six million inhabitants within the borders of the modern Saudi state. The influx of oil wealth that began after World War II and increased enormously in the last three years has touched most corners of Saudi life. Bedouin tribesmen now rejoice in Japanese pickup trucks and high-born urban youngsters head off for university studies abroad almost as a matter of course.

These changes, accelerated lately, pose daunting tasks for Saudi administrators: How to uplift the life in backward provincial areas, where schoolteachers must bake their own bread; how to try to control the hectic expansion of the main cities, Jidda and Riyadh.

Arbiter Between Lesser Potentates

But 20 months' experience in power has left its mark on the regime of the 64-year-old King Khalid, who is said by his admirers to function as the supreme arbiter between lesser Saudi potentates. Over the months he is said to have grown more comfortable in his role. He has come to show increasing aplomb when holding audiences and seems, on some occasions, to refer to his advisers less frequently than he did at the outset of his reign.

The operational primacy of Prince Fahd, who is 55, has been undiminished, although he is understood to have made some unexplained visits to a Riyadh medical center. He is one of the king's many half-brothers.

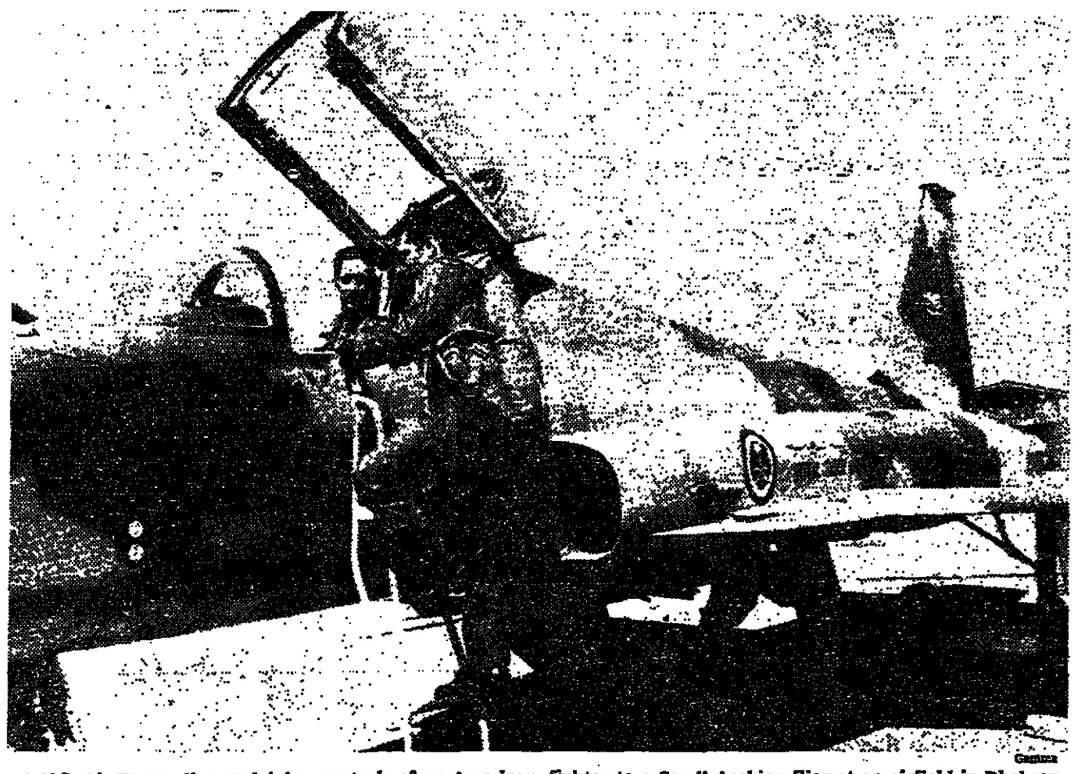
The Government has stressed the importance of continuity and tradition. Prince Fahd himself has affirmed the kingdom's continuing adherence to the Islamic legal system in secular as well as religious affairs. The law sometimes seems harsh by Western standards. For example, the assassin of King Faisal, Prince Faisal Ibn Musad, was beheaded with a sword in a public square.

Counterpoise to Disruption

But the Prince, in addressing a gathering of Islamic scholars, declared that the law had "bestowed peace and stability on this country" and Riyadh does seem to be notably freer from thievery and other crimes than other Middle Eastern capitals.

The emphasis on continuity and tradition appears to be a useful counterpoise to the disruptive effects of all the changes, which could at some point weaken the royal family's control.

In military affairs, the Government has been building up the National Guard, which has long been thought of as a counterweight to the power of the other armed services and is now acquiring United States equipment. These acquisitions have been accompanied by an expanding American presence and by some Saudi bitterness about limitations on arms deliveries.



A U.S. Air Force pilot explaining controls of an American fighter to a Saudi Arabian flier at an airfield in Dhahran. The American presence has expanded and the Saudis are acquiring more military equipment from the United States.

Some traditions of the National Guard, which numbers 30,000, have been traced back to the austere desert warriors, known as the Ikhwan, who helped Ibn Saud found the modern Saudi state 45 years ago.

Yet now the National Guard is being modernized. Four battalions are to be trained as mechanized light infantry, equipped with modern armaments, including 150 armored cars. The first battalion graduated at ceremonies outside Riyadh under the benevolent eye of the guard's commander, Prince Abdullah, who is the third ranking member of the regime. The program began in August 1975 and is to end by 1981.

Directed Against 'Zionist Enemy'

Prince Abdullah declared at the ceremonies that strengthening the National Guard was meant to enable it "to join the Arab strike force against the usurping Zionist enemy in the liberation of the occupied territories, especially holy Jerusalem."

For the time being, the guard is protecting oil installations, radio and television facilities and other sites. The Government also sees the guard as a strategic reserve and as a force to put down civil disturbances.

King Khalid, in written answers given this spring to questions posed by The New York Times, declared, "We always intend to make use of all military equipment that might help build our military strength." And some informants report that there is still interest at high levels in acquiring more advanced warplanes.

As it is, Saudi Arabia is acquiring a second batch of 60 F-5 planes, to cost $750 million with support systems and related training and construction. A previous F-5 order involved fewer aircraft. Some officials are understood to be bitter about complications involved in the purchase of the second batch.

The planes were sold on the basis that they were highly versatile and could be equipped with various weapons. But the United States is furnishing only a thousand Sidewinder air-to-air missiles, half the number the Saudis wanted.

Heavy Dependence on U.S. Arms

Some Saudis are particularly resentful that they are acquiring only 650 Maverick air-to-ground missiles now that the deal has been scaled down because of Congressional opposition. Regardless of such resentment, they remain heavily dependent on the United States and have committed $5 billion for arms in recent years.

Though no statistics for the number of United States employees in Saudi military programs are available, it is said that there are several hundred uniformed and civilian employees of the Defense Department in addition to perhaps 3,000 civilian employees of defense industry contractors, notably the Vinnell Corporation of California, which is training the National Guard.

The total number of Americans in Saudi Arabia is now estimated to be well over 20,000, of whom slightly fewer than 10,000 are connected with military programs. Most of the others are associated with the oil industry.

Saudi diplomacy, with its sudden show of power at the Riyadh conference about the Lebanese civil war, is also related to the oil industry. Activism in foreign affairs is made possible by oil wealth, which Khalid, like King Faisal, has been dispensing abroad.

It was relatively easy for Saudi Arabia, jointly with Kuwait, to bring President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt and President Hafez al-Assad of Syria together with other notables in Riyadh in October because both Egypt and Syria have received economic aid from the Saudis and hope for more.

The Riyadh gathering led to a marked improvement in relations between Egypt and Syria and produced a plan for ending the Lebanese fighting, which was subsequently endorsed by an Arab League conference in Cairo.

Economic progress has been less smooth than that bit of inter-Arab diplomacy. Since the summer of 1975, Government expenditures have been budgeted at a rate of $30 billion a year. But it is said in business circles that the Government is spending less than half that amount.

"Now we are concentrating on the bottlenecks," a high official of the Finance Ministry conceded. The Government has been struggling to reduce the delays at Saudi ports, to spur housing and other construction and also to curb inflation and other ills caused by increased government and private spending.

The Government is having uneven success. An occasional visitor has the feeling now that the traffic jams, the wailing of sirens, the moonlighting by Government officials and other symptoms of the oil-boom atmosphere have become more pronounced in recent months.

Boom Brings Wide Benefits

Though the boom has brought blessings in the form of hospital construction and other benefits, it has also had its victims, including those ordinary Saudis who have suffered from the inflation and the plodding camels run down by the motor vehicles that increasingly dot the desert roads.

By comparison, the oil industry seems relatively tranquil although it has become hugely complex and production has passed nine million barrels on some days.

The Government already owns 60 percent of Aramco, but detailed negotiations toward taking over the remaining 40 percent, owned by four United States companies, have dragged on. It is said at the Oil Ministry that the complete takeover will be announced by the end of the year.

Jamal Hassan Jawa, vice governor of Petromin, the Government organization that handles domestic oil marketing among other oil affairs, said in an interview at his office in the Oil Ministry that the Aramco deal was "almost finished."

A major negotiating point between the Saudi Government and the oil companies is said to have been future marketing arrangements. The fact that output has been allowed to surge above nine million barrels a day is said in business circles to be meant to offset earlier delays in loading tankers and, perhaps, to reflect increased world demand now that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is expected to raise the base price at a meeting to be held in Qatar s on Dec. 15.

The oil industry could produce a as 10 or 11 million barrels a da government policy is to keep a production below nine million. The are the leading oil exporters an the largest proven oil reserves, t more than 150 billion barrels.

Saudi Arabia does not need mor nue now, but officials have been ing that the country will go alor a moderate though unspecified i in the base price for oil. Here Riyadh, a traveler hears varying tions from officials and well pla eigners as to just what the per increase will be. Though predic 10 percent or slightly less are fr heard, no precise figure has bee public.

Both Arab and Western informa are sympathetic to the Arab sid Middle East confrontation assert cent statements and measures United States that are seen here Arab will have the effect of Saudi resistance to any major crease.

In addition to concern over th versial missiles, many techno press resentment at recent de and government actions in th States in opposition to the Aral of Israel.

A high official said, "When S bia argues at OPEC that OPE not impose a price rise that wi Western industrial economies, Arabs will say, 'Look at wha is doing to you.'"

Saudi Arabia has so much theory it could nullify a steep crease by flooding world mar oil, but the general feeling is it too exposed and vulnerable t to defy other oil producers.

Somewhat similarly, the gene is that the Saudis would resort extreme—an embargo on oil ab but only under extraordinar stances. Though Saudi officials vague on the subject lately, a theory is that an embargo wo posed if the United States port to Israel during another war.

Brezhnev Ends Rumanian Parley

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Nov. 24—Leonid I. Brezhnev today ended three days of talks with Rumanians with a call for unity and cohesion among the Soviet Union and its East European allies.

Mr. Brezhnev's appeal, delivered at a public rally, was thought to reflect a dominant theme in his talks with Nicolae Ceausescu, the Rumanian leader, who has long been the most independent figure within the Warsaw Pact alliance. The organization convenes a two-day session here tomorrow.

The plea for unity is also believed to have figured prominently in Mr. Brezhnev's earlier talks with other East European leaders, who will be coming for the Warsaw Pact session. The Soviet leader's meetings with his allies this summer and fall followed a conference of European Communist parties in East Berlin in June, affirming each party's right to a sovereign and independent course.

Today, Mr. Brezhnev declared that "class enemies" in the West were trying to exploit complications and "undermine mutual trust" among the socialist countries, an allusion with direct implications for Rumania. But he told his audience, officially estimated at 7,000, that "we will not give the imperialists the results of which they are dreaming."

Mr. Brezhnev's visit is his first here as the party leader of the Soviet Union. It formalizes a dialogue developing between the Russians and the Rumanians in the wake of more than a decade of ideological and political division. But it does not seem to have prompted any visible shift in Mr. Ceausescu's maverick stance.

The Soviet leader can claim some satisfaction that relations have been smoothed over on the eve of the Warsaw Pact meeting, which is being held here for the first time in a decade. This evening he was honored with the Star of the Socialist Republic of Rumania, First Class, in recognition of his 70th birthday next month as well as his contribution to the cause of Communism.

A joint Soviet-Rumanian declaration contained no surprises. When Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Ceausescu arrived a half-hour late this morning to sign the declaration at the Palace of the Republic, they took their seats with scant attention to each other. Mr. Brezhnev looked grave and did not offer the kind of banter that has characterized some of his appearances. And when the two embraced after signing, it was at Mr. Ceausescu's initiative.

At the rally in the Palace of Sports and Culture, Mr. Ceausescu spoke of favorable prospects for economic cooperation. But he also noted Rumania's links to the nonaligned movement and referred to the need for a nuclear-free zone in the Balkans.

Scranton Charges Soviet Attempt To Manipulate Developing Nations

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 24—William W. Scranton, the United State delegate, warned third world countries today against what he said were Soviet attempts to manipulate them.

In a wide-ranging attack on human rights abuses, he singled out only the Soviet Union by name, charging that it sought to undermine societies based on individual freedoms by discrediting the industrialized democracies as "neo-colonial" exploiters of weaker nations.

Mr. Scranton spoke during the debate in the General Assembly's Social Committee on procedures for dealing with human rights matters—procedures that he said were slow and ineffective and delayed justice until it became "mass murder condoned."

He hit hardest at procedures for handling human rights complaints that come from thousands of individuals yearly. Although United Nations practice requires secrecy about such communications, he remarked, "we all know what they are about."

Delegates Appear Surprised

He cited coercive indoctrination in "work camps" in Indochina, the torture and detention of political prisoners in some Latin American countries and mass slaughter in Africa, as well as the denial of freedom of thought, religion and emigration rights by the Soviet Union.

The candor of the statement and the naming of the Soviet Union appeared to surprise delegates, who stopped rustling documents and listened attentively as if expecting other countries to be named.

"The Soviet Union's efforts to manipulate the developing world are very destructive," Mr. Scranton declared, adding, "Using the guise of neo-colonialism to discredit the ideas and forms of freedom, they hope to strengthen the ideas and forms of totalitarianism."

Among the considerations prompting the criticism, according to United States officials, was concern about the denial of rights to Soviet citizens. Mr. Scranton at one point deplored the suppression of rights, including religious liberty, in the Soviet Baltic states of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

The United States was also said to be reacting to increasing evidence that the Soviet Union was maneuvering in a number of African countries to undercut United States influence. Mr. Scranton, who made an 11-country African tour in July, was understood to have pressed officials in Washington personally to approve the blunt and forceful policy statement on Moscow.

Mr. Scranton also underscored continued United States insistence that the Soivt Union carry out commitments on human rights and freer East-West exchanges agreed to under the Helsinki agreement if it expected in return to receive the promised economic and trade benefits.

The United States delegate said this position would not be altered by the incoming Democratic administration, reportedly basing this assertion on recent statements by President-elect Jimmy Carter.

Mr. Scranton also expressed "deep disappointment" over the United Nations' performance in safeguarding human rights, asserting that the speeches had been superb but the record of accomplishment "sadly deficient."

"The only universality that one can honestly associate with the Universal Declaration on Human Rights is universal lip service," he declared, referring to the 1948 declaration that proclaimed the lofty principles that are supposed to guide governments.

ital Bar Loses t Vote to Limit wyers' Job Shifts

BENJAMIN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

INGTON, Nov. 24—A proposed n the conflict-of-interest rules of here, which would limit the shut- lawyers in Government agencies obs in Washington law firms that ses before the agencies, failed to roval in a test vote last night gal ethics committee of the Dis- Columbia Bar Association. It may evived, however.

Controversy among lawyers here over the ethics committee's proposal has been growing for months and reached new heights when Jimmy Carter won the Presidency three weeks ago. That was so because hundreds of Ford Administration officials, many of them lawyers, are now looking for new jobs in Washington outside the Government.

The proposal would restrict their employment by law firms pressing matters before their former agencies in which the job-seeking lawyers had had "a substantial interest," representing the Government's side.

The 4-to-6 "straw vote" by which the ethics Committee failed to adopt the strict conflict-of-interest rule did not settle the matter. By a vote of 10 to 1, the committee members present also decided to submit the question to the full 19-member committee in a binding, mail-ballot vote to be tallied at the group's next meeting, a week from today.

Saying that "this still gives us a chance" for adoption, the proposal's chief sponsor, Monroe H. Freedman, the dean of Hofstra law School at Hempstead, L.I., predicted that "the mail vote is at least going to be very close. Dean Freedman, a former Washington lawyer, is still active in the bar association here.

Whether the advisory opinion of the ethics committee overcomes the criticism that its proposal might make some former Government lawyers "unemployable" in Washington, the committee also voted yesterday to begin parallel consideration of the legislative aspects of the conflict-of-interest question. This could result in the adoption of similar language as part of the bar association's formal code, which is enacted by the board of governors and approved, with the force of law, by the judges of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. But advocates of the reform said this process would require several years.

Plan Would End Waiver System

The advisory opinion backed by Dean Freedman would make it the policy of the District of Columbia bar that, if a partner in a law firm was disqualified from representing a client because of prior representation for the Government on the other side, the entire law firm would be disqualified.

It would also end the current practice by Government agencies of granting waivers of individual disqualification to their former lawyers when they enter private practice here, a process that Dean Freedman said yesterday was "virtually automatic" and was done without written rulings or recorded deliberation, out of public view. Waivers may be granted to lawyers who agree to screen themselves within a private law firm from those active in prosecuting a Government claim.

Significantly, Mr. Freedman disclosed yesterday that he had obtained the support of Chesterfield Smith, a Florida lawyer who is the past president of the A.B.A. In a letter to Mr. Freedman earlier this month, Mr. Smith wrote of "the unseemly practice of lawyers going from law firms to governmental agencies to law firms where they then practice before those agencies."

"The argument that such a ruling [the one pending here] would block the flow of superior legal talent to Government agencies is, in my judgment, pure hogwash," Mr. Smith said.

TRUDEAU APPEALING FOR NATIONAL UNITY

from Canada.

"The issue was not seeparation of the province, but sound administration of that province," he said. "Quebecers have chosen a new government, not a new country. Mr. Levesque has no mandate to bring in separation."

Then referring to the "Francophones," or French-speaking Canadians, he said that the question facing all Canada was this:

"Can Francophones of uebec consider Canada as their country, or must they feel at hom only in uebec? And you know as well as I know that a new sharing of power between Ottawa and the provinces will never give the answer to that particular question, will never make a Francophone feel more at home in Toronto or in Vancouver than he does in Quebec.

"Quebecers, like citizens of the other provinces seek personal fulfillment in a free and independent way," he continued. "The central question, therefore, is whether this growth of freedom and independence is best assured by Canada, or by Quebec alone."

The solution to Quebec's difficulties with the economy, labor management relations and other problem areas "can only come through closecooperation with the federal Government," Mr. Trudeau declared, adding: "I want to assure the people of Quebec that this cooperation will be forthcoming in every way."

The Prime Minister put an emotional case for preserving the unity that has survived recurring differences between English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians since the British prevailed over the French in Quebec by force of arms in the middle of the 18th century.

"Canada must not survive by force," Mr. Trudeau declared. The present Canadian Confederation, founded in 1867, "provides the world with an example in fraternity."

"This extraordinary undertaking is so advanced on the road to liberty, so advanced in the way of social justice and of prosperity, that to abandon it now would be to sin against the spirit, to sin against humanity.

The Quebec election results were widely regarded as reflecting widespread dissatisfaction over the deteriorating economy and other asserted shortcomings of the province's Liberal government. The Parti Québécois won 69 of the 110 seats in the National Assembly, as Quebec calls its legislature. The separatists had won only six seats in the previous election three years ago.

Despite the emphasis by Mr. Trudeau and others on the recent opinion polls indicating that only a minority of 11 to 18 percent of Quebec's six million people favored independence, the election outcome has had repercussions throughout the country. One result has been a renewal of sporadic, small separatist movements in British Columbia, Alberta and other provinces.

The blow to Mr. Trudeau's Liberal Party in Quebec has threatened the power base of the Prime Minister, who gained the prime ministership in 1968 as a leading champion of federalism.

The setback to Mr. Trudeau on one front has encouraged opponents of his controversial wage and price controls and other programs, said The Gazette of Montreal, a federalist newspaper.

"So the birds of prey are swooping to see if they can get a piece of him," the paper added.

of the intelligence and national security agencies for the incoming administration is David Aaron, who is already at work in the National Security Council office in the Executive Office Building.

The successor to Mr. Bush will be the fourth C.I.A. chief in four years.

The rapid turnover, from Richard Helms to James R. Schlesinger in December 1972 and from Mr. Schlesinger to Mr. Colby in September 1974, has been another unsettling factor for the agency in recent years, according to top-ranking agency officials.

Previously, the position of C.I.A. chief was more stable and secure. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith served from 1950 to 1953, Allen W. Dulles from 1953 to 1961, John A. McCone from 1961 to 1965 and Mr. Helms from 1966 to 1972.

Those directors were less in the public eye than those in the present era but also enjoyed some of the prestige that attended the late J. Edgar Hoover in his long career as Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. But in the last four years, C.I.A. directors have become as interchangeable as Cabinet officers.

Mr. Bush was the first purely political appointee to the office. He was a friend of President Ford and had served two terms in the House in the 1960's. He was chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1972 and was considered a Vice-Presidential hopeful.

He served as the United States representative to the United Nations and as chief of the American liaison office in Peking before being appointed to the C.I.A.

Agency Reorganized Twice

He took over an agency that was under fire for the previous 18 months from Senate and House intelligence committees for having plotted the assassination of such foreign leaders as Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba, undermined the elected leftist Government of Chile and conducted surveillance of American citizens.

The agency had also undergone two major reorganizations conducted by Mr. Schlesinger, who dismissed 2,000 agency employees, and Mr. Colby, who abolished practices deemed illegal.

In the last four months, Mr. Bush has also inaugurated a lesser structural reorganization that has reportedly returned the estimates and analysis branches to the Directorate of Intelligence and also placed the science and technology directorate under the intelligence directorate.

Mr. Bush is given good marks by current agency officials and recently retired intelligence officers.

"Bush reached down and pulled up the best of the younger people there," said Ray S. Cline, former deputy director of the agency.

Agency officials said that they had been particularly pleased with the performance of E. Henry Knoche, the deputy director selected by Mr. Bush.

Daniel K. Inouye, chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, said this evening that he had entertained doubts that a political figure like Mr. Bush should be appointed hea and said that it was a job for sional."

But the Hawaii Democrat sa Bush's performance had remo doubts. "You might say Busl of the best we had," he said. " of the intelligence community inspired by Bush's leadershi sense, it is sad that he has to would have served well under Carter."

An agency spokesman saic Bush had not discussed any p tion plans with his colleague pects to work right up to Jan one.

In his official announcemen "pledged his continuing full to President-elect Carter in th period."

Such fantastic values...they're the toast of the town, so be here early!

or in the Indian activity has been the recent return to the tribes of men who have learned success in the white world—and who have learned how to get grants from Federal agencies. Under Francis Nicholas, a former Green Beret sergeant, the Pleasant Point Passamaquoddy Reservation in Washington County, Me., one of the poorest sections f the Northeast, is aswarm with bulldozers and construction crews putting up houses under Federal programs.

Here in Mashpee, the tribal council president is Russell Peters, a 47-year-old former computer salesman, once Army captain and graduate of Morgan State College, the predominantly black school in Baltimore.

Until recently, this was a tiny backwater, an ethnic enclave isolated from the booming development of the rest of the Cape. It was an Indian district until it was incorporated as a town in 1870, and its population, generally referred to here as "natives," were Wampanoag Indians who had, over the years, intermarried to various degrees with former Hessian mercenaries, Cape Verdian blacks brought over on whaling ships and others.

But real estate development has caught up with it.

A dozen years ago, Town Selectman Kevin P. O'Connell, a white, estimates, there were about a thousand people living in the town. Now there are about 4,000 full time, an additional 2,000 using their second homes nearly every weekend and about 14,000 during the summer.

During this time, the voting population has shifted from about 80 percent Indian to 80 percent white.

Building Is Halted

The Indian suit, filed last August, has halted the town's major industry, real estate and the building of new homes. Since titles are in doubt, banks will not give mortgages. Homes cannot be sold. The state passed a bill to back construction of a school after bonds could not be floated. Banks have started foreclosures. Even the sale of lawn fertilizer at the local hardware store is down.

At New Seabury, one of the largest developments on the Cape, the town's major taxpayer and a prime target of the suit, the real estate sales office is empty and quiet and two-thirds of the management staff have been laid off. The development, with more than $150 million worth of real estate, includes houses costing from $40,000 to more than $200,000, two golf courses, 16 tennis courts, a gatehouse and streets with names like Bosun's Lane.

Mr. O'Connell, a deputy sheriff, and the other white selectman, George Benway, a real estate agent, are furious at the effects of the lawsuit.

"We're not talking about Indian rights; this is people's rights," Mr. O'Connell said. "They say they're fighting the developer, the David and Goliath syndrome, but this is affecting everyone—the mailman, the plumber, the truck driver, the shoestring developer who mortgages himself to build a house, the retired people who want to sell. I shudder to think what it will do in another two and a half months. The town will die."

"They want us to go back to business as usual," said Mr. Peters, the Indian leader. "That's what we're diametrically opposed to. We're outnumbered five to one already; soon we'll be outnumbered 20 to 1. We've lost political control, lost economic control, lost everything."

The tribe's language, a dialect of Algonquin, has been lost, he added, saying that when he left his computer job to join the Indian movement, "I had a lot to learn about the culture and the heritage."

"Because of the intermarriage, those who tended toward the white would go that way, and those who tended toward the black figured that at least there was the N.A.A.C.P.," Mr. Peters said.

CALLS FOR FLU SHOTS REPORTED TO SURGE

Increase Seen as Result of Case in Missouri, but Officials Find No Evidence It Has Spread

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN

Federal epidemiologists intensified yesterday their investigation into an apparent case of swine influenza in Missouri as health departments elsewhere reported an upsurge in demand for swine flu shots.

New Jersey and New York health officials, for example, reported the heaviest number of swine flu shots given in recent weeks.

The surge in what had been an unenthusiastic response to the nationwide immunization program against swine flu was prompted by reports Monday from health officials in Missouri and at the Federal Center for Disease Control in Atlanta of an apparent case of swine influenza involving Larry E. Hardison, a 32-year-old telephone installer from Concordia.

Some semantic confusion resulted from the use by health officials of the word "confirmed" in describing Mr. Hardison's case to news organizations.

In reporting cases of influenza in medical journals, virologists generally use the word confirm to mean that the diagnosis was based on a combination of clinical information, such as symptoms and physical findings, as well as laboratory test results that include not just blood tests but also isolation of the influenza virus from swabs of the patient's throat.

In Mr. Hardison's case, "we don't have a throat swab and didn't have an opportunity to get any," Dr. Elmer Spurrier, the director of the Missouri state health department laboratory said in a telephone interview yesterday. "We've done what we can do with this," Dr. Spurrier added.

Dr. H. Denny Donnell Jr., the Missouri epidemiologist, said Monday that Missouri and Federal scientists had confirmed Mr. Hardison's case as swine influenza based on his team's investigation that found Mr. Donnell's upper respiratory infection compatable with a diagnosis of influenza. He also said that scientists in Missouri and at the Atlanta center had detected evidence that Mr. Hardison's body had responded to an infection by swine influenza.

Tests called hemagglutination inhibition were done on blood samples that had been taken in the early phase of Mr. Hardison's illness on Oct. 20 and again on Nov. 13 after he had recuperated. The tests, done in the Missouri state health department laboratories and repeated in Atlanta, showed that the amount of antibodies to Influenza A/New Jersey (swine flu) had risen from 1:10 to 1:80 during this interval.

The diagnosis of swine influenza in such a case would be considered stronger if there had been evidence of person-to-person spread of the infection. As of yesterday, the medical detectives had found no other suspect cases of swine influenza in Concordia or elsewhere in the country.

After health officials at the Center for Disease Control warned of the threat of a swine influenza epidemic, they set up a surveillance network throughout the country whereby doctors were to submit acute and convalescent blood samples from patients with upper respiratory infections. The aim was to detect evidence of swine flu as early as possible.

The blood samples in Mr. Hardison's case were not taken as part of this system but because Mr. Hardison's doctor suspected influenza, Dr. Spurrier said.

Through a similar network, scientists have been checking for evidence of swine influenza in pigs, birds and other animals. A virus resembling swine influenza had been isolated from pigs in Missouri and other states earlier this year.

Spokesmen for the Atlanta center said it would be next week before they had results of additional laboratory tests to determine if any other people in Concordia or elsewhere in Missouri had swine influenza.

Meanwhile, Dr. Pascal Imperato, New York deputy health commissioner said that "all our clinics are extremely busy. They are much busier than they have been over the last couple of weeks."

Dr. Imperato predicted that the number of people reporting for swine influenza shots would increase after Thanksgiving "A lot of people don't want a sore arm for turkey cutting," he said.

There was a 50 percent increase in the number of people who got swine influenza shots here Tuesday. About 6,000 persons a day had been getting the shots since Oct. 12, but on Tuesday the number rose to about 10,000, a health department spokesman said.

Health officials in Connecticut and New Jersey reported sharp increases in the number of telephone calls from people asking about the swine flu shots.

A spokesman for the Connecticut state health department said that most of the calls seemed to be coming from younger persons who were worried about getting sick. "The feeling I get is that we're not getting calls from elderly or the chronically ill (high risk groups). We've already inoculated 86 percent of the high risk cases," the spokesman said.

ARMY CLOSING ARSENAL DESPITE MONDALE PLEDGE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP) — The Pentagon said today it would go ahead with the closing or reduction in operations of seven military bases, including the Philadelphia's Frankford Arsenal, which Vice President-elect Walter F. Mondale had promised to keep open. The arsenal will be closed next September.

At the same time, the Pentagon switched direction and decided to keep open the Defense Supply Agency's clothing factory in Philadelphia, preserving 1,449 jobs.

The actions were announced following studies of previously proposed base cutbacks that the Pentagon said were needed to improve efficiency and save money.

The work done at Frankford will be transferred to the new Armament Research and Development Command with headquarters at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J., and the Armament Materiel Readiness Command at Rock Island Arsenal, Ill.

Support operations at Stewart Sub-Post, near West Point, N. Y., will be shifted to a civilian contractor. The Pentagon said that 71 civilian employees affected probably will be offered jobs at the United States Military Academy, while 31 military personnel at Stewart will be reassigned.

Howard R. Hughes's giant wooden flying boat in a hangar in Long Beach, Calif. The photograph was taken last month.

Navy and NASA Indicate Interest in Reactivating Hughes's Big Plane

LONG BEACH, Calif., Nov. 24 (AP)—Hidden 29 years in a cavernous hangar, Howard R. Hughes's giant wooden flying boat, the Spruce Goose, is getting a new look from Government officials who say they may try to send it aloft.

The late billionaire's Summa Corporation, the conglomerate that runs the Hughes estate, released yesterday a series of photographs of the plane, including one taken in 1947 that shows Mr. Hughes talking to technicians inside the three-story-tall craft.

The plane made its lone flight Nov. 2, 1947, skimming along 70 feet above the water for less than a mile with Mr. Hughes at the controls. Ever since, it has been locked in its hangar at the harbor here under 24-hour guard.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Navy say they are interested in the Goose, known more formally as the Hercules Flying Boat, as a part of a vehicle research project.

John McTigue, a NASA research engineer, said he was "surprised at the shape it's in after 30 years," adding, "It has been kept in a fairly controlled environment. They have air blowing over the surfaces continually, trying to keep the temperatures of the vehicle and the air exactly the same so there will be no condensation or corrosion."

The plane is owned by the Government and rented by Summa Corporation for $800 a month, plus maintenance costs.

Ohio Supreme Court Upholds State's Death Penalty

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 24—The Ohio Supreme Court upheld today the constitutionality of the state's death penalty because it is "imposed only in cases of purposeful murder" and when other factors are involved.

Ohio has 81 persons, including two women on Death Row. The last execution in the state was that of Donald Reinbolt of Columbus, on March 15, 1963.

"It's a hell of a Thanksgiving for people on Death Row," said Benson Wolman, Ohio director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The court ruled that "Ohio's statutory framework for the imposition of capital punishment, as adopted effective Jan. 2, 1974, is constitutional and does not impose cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution."

The Ohio chapter of the Liberties Union said it would join in appeals of the cases involved.

The court upheld the penalty in the cases of Carl Bayless of Akron, who was convicted of armed robbery and the murders of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Anthony on Feb. 27, 1974, and Roger Strodes of Springfield, convicted of aggravated robbery and the murder of Dwight Baker, during a holdup on Jan. 8, 1974.

"It cannot be claimed," the court said, "that punishment by death in Ohio is excessive because it is grossly disproportional to the severity of the crime, for death is imposed only in cases of purposeful murder and only when one or more specific aggravating factors are also present."

"Nor can it be fairly charged that Ohio's statutes are likely to result in capricious, arbitrary and discriminatory death sentences," the court said.

The court further said that juries are directed by the law to determine only guilt or innocence and whether the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of one or more aggravating factors specified in the indictment.

Mr. Wolman said Ohio law does not meet United States constitutional requirements because it does not set necessary mitigating circumstances that the United States Supreme Court has required in such cases.

Death Ordered in Garrotings

TORRANCE, Calif., Nov. 24 (UPI)—A Superior Court jury has ruled that a man who served as a Marine Corps scout sniper in Vietnam should die in the gas chamber for garroting two women last summer.

A seven-man, five-woman jury said late yesterday that the murders constituted "special circumstances" that made the imposition of the death penalty mandatory against Richard Lee James, 27 years old, at Inglewood, Calif. Sentencing was set for Dec. 15.

The panel deliberated into the fourth day before finding Mr. James guilty of murdering Deborah Ann Baker, 23, last June 5 and Karma Dean Berry, 19, on June 12. Both were found dead in hotel rooms.

Clemency Urged in Capital Cases

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (UPI)—The Council of Bishops of the United Methodist Church has urged President Ford and President-elect Jimmy Carter to grant clemency to all those facing the death penalty, the church announced today.

The bishops, meeting in Philadelphia last week, passed a resolution urging all members of the 9.9-million member denomination to petition President Ford, Mr. Carter and "other in authority to extend clemency" to those facing capital punishment.

Oklahoma Judge's Press Gag Upset

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP)—The Oklahoma City newspapers cannot be barred by a county judge from publishing the name and picture of an 11-year-old boy found delinquent by reason of second-degree manslaughter, the Supreme Court ruled today.

The Court struck down, at least temporarily, a "gag order" limiting reporting in the case that was issued last August by Judge Charles E. Halley.

The Oklahoma Publishing Company challenged the gag order as an unconstitutional prior restraint on publication. The company owns The Daily Oklahoman, The Oklahoma City Times and The Sunday Oklahoman.

The newspapers, after losing an appeal in the Oklahoma Supreme Court, asked Justice Byron R. White to set aside Judge Halley's order so that they could freely report all details of the case when the boy came up for sentencing today. Justice White referred the case to the full Court. Sentencing, meanwhile, was delayed until Jan. 12.

Rail Switchman Fatally Shot

Larry Donnel Brewer was arrested last July and charged with fatally shooting an Oklahoma City railroad switchman as the man stood on the platform of a moving switch engine. The boy's name and picture were widely displayed by the local news media.

Judge Halley then issued a pretrial order prohibiting further display, ruling that the boy's right to rehabilitation outweighed any freedom of the press consideration or the public's right to know. The youth was later convicted of delinquency by second-degree manslaughter.

In its order, the Supreme Court said that the gag order could not stand because "the name and picture of the minor were made available to the public as a result of a hearing held at the outset which was in fact open to the press."

Last June, the Court ruled that pretrial restraints on reporting could rarely be justified. Judges must take all other available measures to insure fair trials before resorting to gag orders, it said.

The ruling, made in connection with a much-publicized Nebraska murder case, came very close to outlawing all such gag orders.

"I see it as a victory. There are no adverse conclusions to be drawn from the Court's narrow wording," Floyd Abrams, a New York lawyer, said of today's stay order. "It is a narrow victory, but the facts were unique. The Court went only as far as it had to go to strike down the order."

Mr. Abrams, one of the country's leading communications law experts, represented the Nebraska Press Association in last summer's free press case and previously represented The New York Times in its successful bid to publish the Pentagon Papers.

While the Court's order gave no indication of how eight of the Justices voted, it mentioned that Justice William J. Brennan Jr. voted to grant the stay, but did not agree with the order's wording.

'JOY OF SEX' AUTHOR GAINS ON ROYALTIES

A Judge Orders Hutchins Center to Restore Some Funds—Assails Contract as a 'Shabby Pact'

By JON NORDHEIMER

Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 24—Federal District Judge David W. Williams has ruled that a California institution must restore to Dr. Alexander Comfort, author of the best-selling "The Joy of Sex," a portion of the royalties it shared with him under a complicated contract that enabled the British physician to collect American profits from the book in dollars instead of English sterling.

But the judge, calling the arrangement a "shabby pact," refused to award Dr. Comfort $1 million in damages that he had sought against the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

Under the contract, in which the author had assigned the copyright of his book to the institution, the center collected all royalties, retained 20 percent of the total and passed the balance to Dr. Comfort.

"The men on Eucalyptus Hill [the 41-acre Santa Barbara estate occupied by the center since 1959] were uncomfortable with Comfort's scheme," the judge wrote in his decision, "but the thought of adding him to the staff, plus having him effectively pay his own salary, was tempting.

"The shabby pact was one in which Comfort untruthfully represented that he had written 'Joy' in the United States and under the auspices of the center while using its facilities. The center winked at the fraud."

Although the judge voided the contract, he did not find the center guilty of fraud against Dr. Comfort, as the author had alleged in his suit, and the scholar was also denied his demand for severance pay.

Dr. Robert Hutchins, the former University of Chicago president who had founded the center under the auspices of the Fund for the Republic and reassumed its leadership last year when it underwent a reorganization, said today that he was relieved by the court's decision. It was the reorganization period that set in motion events that led to the court's ruling.

On May 10, 1975, the center dismissed 20 senior fellows, all the top scholars except Dr. Comfort, in a drastic effort to reduce costs. In his litigation, Dr. Comfort charged that this act effectively voided his contract, since it had "collapsed" the intellectual environment and fellowship he had sought at the Santa Barbara retreat.

Judge Williams appeared to accept this argument, ordering the center to return all royalties collected on behalf of the scholar since the date of reorganization. The center was allowed, however, to retain its 20 percent "cut" received before that date.

Dr. Hutchins said that nearly $500,000 in royalties had accumulated in trusts established by the center on behalf of Dr. Comfort, who had requested that his share be returned to him over a long period of time, apparently in consideration of tax payments. He had received, in addition to profits from the book, $32,000 a year from the center in salary and fringe benefits.

"The Joy of Sex" was a hugely profitable publication, an illustrated celebration of sex that sold more than one million hard-cover copies at $12.95 in the American market alone and 3.7 million paperbacks at $6.95. Distributed in this country by Crown Publishing Inc., it was first issued on Dec. 28, 1972. The paperback first appeared in March 1974 and has remained ever since on the trade paperback best-selling list.

In addition, Dr. Comfort is the author of "More Joy," which has sold 350,000 hard-cover copies since its publication in 1974 and a half-million paperbacks. The author's latest book, "A Good Age," which is concerned with gerentology, was published last month.

Dr. Comfort's contract with the center was concerned only with royalties from "The Joy of Sex."

Dr. Comfort was not available today for comment. His attorney, Ira Lurvey, said that his client had acted legally throughout his relationship with the center and had entered the contract without consideration of taxes.

The lawyer said that Dr. Comfort had had to face receiving profits from American sales in English sterling from his London publisher while residing in the United States. It required a sacrifice, Mr. Lurvey said, for Dr. Comfort to convert the pounds into dollars, so the arrangement with the center was devised as a mutal and pragmatic solution.

Dr. Comfort, who was a pediatrician turned gerontologist before he wrote about sexual behavior, became an associate fellow at the center in 1969 while he still resided in England. He made occasional trips to Santa Barbara before moving there in early 1974 as a permanent senior fellow, 14 months after the publication of "Joy."

BANKER CALLS LANCE 'FISCAL CONSERVATIVE'

Choice for a Cabinet-Level Post Projects 'Country' Image—Lost '74 Georgia Governor Race

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Atlanta Constitution published today a picture of Thomas Bertram Lance, President-elect Jimmy Carter's likely appointee to a high Cabinet-level job, seated in a rocking chair.

"It's just like him," said A.H. Stern, chairman of the Trust Company of Georgia. Mr. Lance, president of the National Bank of Georgia since 1974, is a self-styled "country banker" who learned his business in Calhoun, Ga., population 7,000.

"I'd say he is a conservative, a fiscal conservative," Mr. Stern said, adding that he based his opinion mostly on Mr. Lance's tenure as State Transportation Director.

"He doesn't spend money he doesn't have, and I'd interpret his appointment to the budget office as a sign Mr. Carter plans to be economically responsible," Mr. Stern added.

Started as a Teller

A large and voluble man, Mr. Lance, 45 years old, started as a $90-a-month teller in the Calhoun First National Bank in 1951. He became the president of that bank in 1963.

He came to statewide prominence in 1970 when Mr. Carter, Georgia's Governor, appointed him to the State Highway Commissioner's post, where he was instrumental in creating a Transportation Department.

Associated Press
Thomas Bertram Lance

Mr. Lance, who left the transportation job in 1973 to run for Governor, created a vigorous, aggressive image without framing any dictinctive issues in the campaign, Atlanta sources say. He finished third, behind Gov. George Busbee and Lester G. Maddox.

Nonetheless, he left political experts with the feeling that he had a political future and might yet win the Governor's chair. He threw himself into civic affairs, in the style of most prominent Atlanta businessmen, and was picked last year by Mayor Maynard Jackson as co-chairman of a drive to gain voter approval of much-needed bond issues.

High Marks for Salesmanship

Only one of the issues carried but he was given high marks for his salesmanship.

In 1974, just a few months before he bought a substantial interest in the National Bank of Georgia and was elected its president, he disclosed that his net worth was $3.1 million.

"He never has become prominent in any of the established leadership roles here," said one veteran watcher of Atlanta life, "But on the other hand, I've never seen any outsider get so far so fast."

Mr. Lance has a reputation for shrewdness and affability, as well as seething ambition.

"He has managed to stay in the news a lot," said Mr. Stern, the Trust Company of Georgia chairman. The holding company that Mr. Stern heads owns the second largest bank in Atlanta.

Promoted Himself and Carter

"He has done a lot of speaking on Mr. Carter's behalf," Mr. Stern continued, "and he has put himself in ads for his bank, including his voice on the radio and his picture in the papers."

In his brief tenure at the helm of the National Bank, Mr. Lance's most notable move has been to buy three small, troubled local banks, Georgia bank sources say.

He also recently sold $8 million in common shares in the bank, a move regarded by bankers there as creative, given the cautious economic climate of the city now.

Most Atlanta businessmen, bankers and others interviewed by telephone had warm praise for Mr. Lance, calling him vigorous, aggressive, accessible and efficient.

Mr. Lance reportedly told major stockholders in his bank last week about the possibility that he would join the Carter administration.

The plan reached at the meeting with the stockholders was to bring King Cleveland, now chairman of the bank, back to his former post as president and chief executive if Mr. Lance took a Washington appointment.

Mr. Lance, a native of Gainesville, Ga., is described by a fellow banker as one of three major shareholders in the bank, with holdings considerably less than half of the total equity.

Berrigans Held in Pentagon Protest

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (UPI)—Phillip and Daniel Berrigan, both activist antiwar Roman Catholic priests in the 1960's, were arrested today when they attempted to chain themselves across a main entrance of the Pentagon to protest defense spending. Phillip, who has since married a former nun and is no longer a priest, and Daniel, a Jesuit priest, were among four persons arrested today. It was the second arrest for Phillip in a continuing demonstration that started Monday.

aid that "there is virtually no doubt" that the 45-year-old Mr. Lance would be named to "a Cabinet or Cabinet-level position" and was "being seriously considered" for several, including Secretary of the Treasury.

However, Mr. Lance said last night that he had discussed only the budget position with Mr. Carter and no other jobs.

Carter Meets With Young

Sources in the Carter camp had told The New York Times that Mr. Lance, who is president of the National Bank of Georgia, had been selected as the new director of the budget office. Last night, the President-elect issued a short statement describing such reports as "premature."

Today, however, Mr. Granum, in a briefing here, repeatedly stressed that no final decision had been made and said that reports to the contrary were "inaccurate."

Mr. Carter, meanwhile, was spending the day at his home in nearby Plains, where he met with Representative Andrew Young, the Georgia Democrat who is his closest black adviser, before Mr. Young's scheduled departure tomorrow for Africa.

A highly placed Carter aide said today that discussions between Mr. Carter and Mr. Lance had initially been related to the budget position and that the subject of the Treasury post had emerged later.

The aide said the "odds were on" the directorship.

Mr. Lance, a close friend and long-time supporter of the President-elect, served as director of the Georgia Department of Transportation while Mr. Carter was Governor. He began his career in finance as a $90-a-month teller at a bank in Calhoun, Ga., in 1951.

A dozen years later he became its president. In 1966 he supported Mr. Carter's unsuccessful bid for Governor and assisted him again in 1970 when he won.

In 1974, Mr. Lance himself ran for Governor and lost. That same year, he became president of the National Bank of Georgia in Atlanta.

Bank Lends Carter $1 Million

PLAINS, Ga., Nov. 24 (UPI)—The National Bank of Georgia, headed by Mr. Lance, has given loan credit of more than $1 million to Mr. Carter and his family for construction of a peanut sheller and a warehouse, Mr. Carter's office said today.

In addition, the bank this year has provided up to $3.9 million in loans to purchase peanuts under an arrangement that calls for repayment of the loan as soon as the peanuts are processed and sold.

The details of Mr. Carter's business dealings with the bank were made available at the request of newsmen.

According to a two-page news release, the Carter warehouse has a "draw down" loan of $708,057.88 for the sheller and $305,365.36 for construction of the new peanut warehouse.

The first loan was approved in the spring of 1975 and the second last February, and the two were combined last July. The warehouse pays one-seventh of the loan each year with a final due date of January 1983.

Carter's Control of Some Agencies Is Months Off

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—Jimmy Carter will be unable to gain control of many regulatory agencies for five or six months and, in a few cases, a year or more after he becomes President. The delay will be caused primarily by the time-consuming process of selecting nominees to fill existing vacancies and obtaining their confirmation by the various Senate committees and the full Senate.

A small number of important regulatory agencies, which deal with major parts of the economy, will be dominated for longer periods of time by officials appointed either by President Ford or former President Richard M. Nixon.

In the important area of banking and economic policy, for example, all seven seats of the Federal Reserve Board are now filled, and its present chairman, Arthur F. Burns, has said that he intends to complete his term, which runs to January 1978.

There may also be a long delay before Mr. Carter can develop his own majority on the seven-man Federal Communications Commission, the agency that sets much of the nation's telephone and broadcasting policies.

According to several communications experts, there are two factors that may block the Carter administration from assuming immediate control of the F.C.C. First, the present Republican chairman, Richard E. Wiley, is not expected to leave the commission until the end of his term on June 30, 1977. Second, James H. Quello, a conservative Democrat who next spring will have served longer than any other commissioner in the history of the agency, reportedly may keep his seat until his term expires in 1980.

Thus, even though Mr. Carter can name a chairman and also appoint a successor to Benjamin L. Hooks, who is resigning to become the head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the incoming President may not have his own majority until Mr. Quello leaves office.

The five-man Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which licenses reactors and enforces nuclear safety rules, is another agency over which the new President may not be able to assume immediate control.

The present chairman is Marcus A. Rowden, an independent who was appointed by President Ford and whose term does not expire until next June. Even though there is now a vacancy on the commission, and Mr. Carter can name his own chairman, the new administration may not have a majority there for seven months.

Chairman Has Fixed Term

An unusual provision of the law creating the Consumer Product Safety Commission gives its chairman a fixed term, which the new President may not abrogate. Thus, even though an existing vacancy will allow the Democrats to have a majority as soon as it is filled, the present chairman, John Byington, can continue as the head of the agency until October 1978, when his term expires.

Another agency where the Carter administration will probably not assume immediate control is the National Labor Relations Board. The term of the present chairman, Betty Southard Murphy, expires in December 1979. Another seat becomes vacant in December 1977, but that is already held by a Democrat.

Many of the other key regulatory agencies having vacancies that would permit the Carter administration to take almost immediate control are headed by chairmen who are expected to submit their resignations as soon as Mr. Carter becomes President.

The Federal Trade Commission, which seeks to curb false advertising and enforce parts of the antitrust laws, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, which regulates trucking, railroads and barges, both have vacancies that will permit a Democratic takeover as soon as the nominations are made and confirmed.

Roderick M. Hills, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Richard L. Dunham, chairman of the Federal Power Comission, are expected to submit their resignations when the Carter administration assumes control of the Government.

The change of administration and the appointment of new chairmen do not necessarily mean drastic changes in economic policy.

Officials who have seen the plans of what the Carter administration hopes to achieve in the regulation of the nation's airlines, for example, predict that the policy of the incoming Democrats will closely resemble that adopted in the last year and a half by the current chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, John E. Robson.

Another area where there may be little change is communications. Last August, Mr. Carter spoke at a Washington forum arranged by Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate. In response to questions, the Georgia Democrat indicated that there should be stronger Government curbs on sex and violence on television and more competition in the communications industry.

In late October, however, a three-man team from the Carter operation, led by Charles Kirbo, an Atlanta lawyer, met with top officials of the National Association of Broadcasters and sought to reassure the trade group that no drastic changes were in store for them. According to a high official in the Carter team and to Joseph Browder, an environmentalist who recently quit the team in protest, a similar meeting was held in October in Houston with major oil producers.

New Pilgrims in the New World

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The pilgrims keep coming, blemished by jet lag now, but with the same timelessly tight grasp on their possessions and anxious eye for this new place, America. Customs agents seized a cooked chicken with a friendly apology, and some apples, too, but otherwise the group of 49 Soviet Jews who arrived on Alitalia Flight 610 moved into this new land largely unnoticed Tuesday night.

And early yesterday they began to shed their foreignness, with 23 of them staying in hotels and following relief officials' instructions to help them settle in the city. The rest continued the Diaspora on early-morning jets to Chicago, Cleveland and beyond.

There wasn't a peasant in sight as the group came through the initial corridor maze at Kennedy International Airport and encountered Paul Barash, an official of the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, working nonchalantly by a cluster of telephone booths, checking them off in a friendly patois that included Yiddish and German, plus English asides ("someone at the Rome airport is selling everyone weird ashtrays").

In his 30 years at this job, Mr. Barash has gone from exhilarating dockside scenes when mobs of ragged World War II refugees seem to tumble ashore in gratitude, to the current more discreet, if no less personally exciting, arrivals at Kennedy when an occasional refugee even comes through with his pet dog in tow.

Three generations of the Jankowich family were aboard Alitalia 610, completing a journey of months by way of Leningrad, Vienna and Rome. The two middle-generation sons were first off, already in a bit of trouble because they had packed their papers in their luggage and oranges spilled into the aisle when they went searching as officials watched. But with their berets and their mustachioed smiles, the young men seemed to prevail.

The family was offering America the occupational talents of motor mechanic, locksmith and seamstress and in spirit seemed closest to the brave beginnings cherished in immigrant folklore and fact.

But then came the young Rozenshtein family of three in well tailored outfits, she a pediatrician of great beauty and charming fluency in English, he a handsome mathematics researcher who asked Sam Mortman, a worker with the agency, to use English, please. "Yiddish—I have trouble," Mr. Rozenshtein explained. Sam Mortman shifted his cigar, smiled and said Groucho-like, "I have trouble with English."

Paul Barash spotted them right at the phone booth. "That's a net loss for Russia and a great gain for the United States."

With little children in good wool leggings and sylish denims, some fur trim on the women's coats, and with young fathers in leather car coats and the like, there was a striving middle-class tone to the phalanx. There were no religious trappings and, in fact, the busiest of the Jankowiches, Noyach, smiled at the prospect of seeing rabbinical-like beards and curls in some of the neighborhoods in the city where he might eventually settle.

As if having cased this place all the way through McLuhan, the younger adults seemed stylishly cool as they waited at the airport. But there was an old woman named Mindlin who came tapping along with her cane, smiling and saying "Shalom!" to one and all.

At 6:19 P.M. the group was led out of the customs area into the main lobby of the International Arrivals Building, officially accepted here and free—at least as much as any traveler can feel free, at that confused city outpost. "All right, move it," said Jerry Spicker, a refugee worker and himself a refugee 25 years ago, smiling at his boot-camp directive. Outside, mufflers were wrapped about as the cold hit, and a Port Authority policeman parted the whirl of Kennedy auto traffic so that the group, with a child in a stroller and an old woman in a wheelchair, could cross to a bus.

No longer is there the exultant sighting of the Statue of Liberty by decktop pilgrims. These days arriving masses sit two-by-two with snacktrays; they no longer huddle. Even so there was a moment in the night air when the delight of arrival struck the newcomers as their bus reached the crest of the Queensboro Bridge and suddenly confronted a brilliantly illuminated Manhattan Island. "Uh!" was the startled reaction of Yuri Kuchukov, a young bearded emigré who woke his exhausted child to witness the panorama of lights sprinkled upward in columns and reflected in the river as if a phosphorescent tide ringed the new land.

As they boarded the bus, Mr. Barash had advised the beautiful pediatrician: "One thing about the United States is you can get anything you want. They won't give it to you." (here there was laughter, especially from nearby Americans) 'but you can get it in time, and you are young."

At 49th and Fifth the bus stopped for a light, and there was an eloquent silence as everybody watched a decorator setting up the Christmas lights and trees and dolls in the Saks windows. Two avenues later, the bus balanced the new life out and inched into the city's porno belt.

The Jankowiches and the Kuchukovs checked into the Consulate Hotel while a gray-haired bellhop piled their luggage in the narrow, dim lobby. Young Noyach Jankowich led the group inside and carried his son and was followed by his father Abraham, who used a cane. Noyach already had reset his watch to our time, and the first thing yesterday he called relatives in Borough Park to say they had arrived.

into why Mr. Bianchi, despite two court orders directing him to turn over all "exculpatory" evidence to Mr. Reilly's attorneys, apparently did not do so. Also unanswered was the matter of further investigation into the death of Mr. Reilly's mother, Barbara Gibbons, and the possible perjury of a key prosecution witness.

Earlier this year Superior Court Judge John A. Speziale ordered Mr. Reilly's manslaughter conviction and six-to-16-year prison sentence thrown out, ruling that "a grave injustice" had been done the youth at his 1974 trial. Judge Speziale, ruling after a six-week hearing on a petition for a new trial, called the case "unusual, bizarre and complicated" and said that evidence that might have cleared the youth had not been presented.

That hearing was marked by the identification for the first time of a neighbor's fingerprints—which had been taken by the state police three years before from a jimmied back door of the Gibbons cottage—and by testimony by a leading psychologist that Mr. Reilly had been brainwashed into confessing to the murder. What emerged as well was a startling view of the not-so-proper lives being led here amid the prim white-steepled churches, colonial homes and rolling green hills of rural New England.

Mr. Reilly, a taciturn sandy-haired youth, said only "I'm so happy" after the judge's ruling today. Later, when somebody reminded him that tomorrow was Thanksgiving, he said: "It sure is!" He was to have been retried for the killing later this year or early next year

T. F. Gilroy Daly, the defense attorney, who was brought into the case by Mr. Miller and worked largely without fee, was more visibly pleased. "I feel great," he exulted. "It's a victory for justice."

Most emotional were Mr. Reilly's friends and neighbors, who had taken him in after the murder and had organized a legal defense fund, hired attorneys and sought the help of Mr. Miller and other literary figures who live in Litchfield County.

Marion Madow cried openly. She had taken Mr. Reilly into her home and had become, in effect, his foster mother, mortgaging her house to raise his $60,000 bail.

"We won, what are you crying for?" Mr. Daly said, patting Mrs. Madow's head to comfort her.

"I'm crying, but not from sadness," she replied. "It's silly but that's the way I am."

Her husband, Mickey, said the credit belonged to Mr. Miller and Mr. Daly and a lot of other people, "but especially to all the little people who stood up for what they knew was right and hung together."

Mr. Daly, in his petition earlier this year for a new trial, had argued that the sequence of events on the night of the murder proved that Mr. Reilly could not have killed his mother between 9:15 and 9:40 P.M., as had been alleged.

Mr. Reilly had contended that he arrived home from a church meeting in Canaan at about 9:50 P.M., found his mother lying in a pool of blood, called for help and greeted the first state trooper on the scene at 10:02 P.M.—a sequence of events that did not leave enough time for anyone to inflict the multiple wounds Miss Gibbons had suffered, hide a murder weapon, change clothes and wash so thoroughly that no trace of blood was ever found on him.

A major prosecution witness had testified, however, that Mr. Reilly called her for help at 9:40 P.M., not at 9:50 P.M. or later. The witness, Barbara Fenn, was the evening supervisor at the Sharon Hospital emergency room that night and is the wife of a state trooper. She testified that immediately after speaking to Mr. Reilly she called the state police, who logged her call at 9:58 P.M. No explanation was ever offered for the 18-minute gap.

Mr. Santore told Judge Cohen this morning that, in reviewing Mr. Reilly's case file, he had come across two previously unknown sworn statements that placed Mr. Reilly in downtown Canaan, miles from his home, at 9:40 P.M.

The statements, by Frank E. Finney, an auxiliary state trooper, and his wife, Wanda, were taken on Sept. 30, 1973, and Oct. 4, 1973. Both said they had attended a murder movie at the Canaan drive-in theater on the night of the murder, had left during the second feature and had encountered Mr. Reilly in his flashy blue Corvette sports car at a downtown Canaan intersection at 9:40 P.M.

In addition Mrs. Finney said that the state police had had her re-enact that chance encounter a few days after the murder. According to her statement, the encounter re-enacted by the state police showed that it had occurred at 9:39 P.M.

Mr. Finney, who works as a Caaan fireman, said today that he had never been asked to testify at any time since giving his statement and that he had had no official communication with the state police about it. But he declined to explain why he and his wife had not come forward on their own.

Mr. Santore said today that after discovering the statements in the file, he showed them to Judge Speziale, who is now the presiding judge of the Superior Court, and that "he indicated to me that the statements were, in fact, exculpatory."

Mr. Daly then rose to ask for dismissal of the manslaughter charges against Mr. Reilly on grounds of insufficient evidence, in a scenario that had been worked out previously in the judge's chambers. And Judge Cohen, after reading the two statements into the record, concurred.

"In order to write f-i-n-i-s to this case and in the inteersts of justice, the case is dismissed," the judge said.

Mr. Santore later asked permission to reinstitute prosecution of Mr. Reilly at some time in the future, and Judge Cohen agreed in a move that was considered a formality.

Afterwards Mr. Reilly and his friends went to a nearby inn to celebrate their victory in a case that has already given rise to two books and a movie contract. He said that he had no plans for the immediate future but planned to continue working for the Hartford Ambulance Company, which hired him shortly after he won a new trial.

"But for later—well, I might go back to college," he added. "I'm deciding between law and medicine."

Mr. Miller, who had become deeply involved in the case and at one point had hired a private detective who discovered much of the new evidence presented earlier this year, was not as convinced as Mr. Reilly and his friends that the murder case was over.

"Well, here we are, several million words later, and we're back where we started from," the playwright said. "Who killed Barbara Gibbons?"

Bridge: New Yorkers Among L[illegible] In Blue Ribbon Pairs

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Special to The New York Times

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 24—Two young New York experts were among the leaders at the halfway mark in the blue ribbon pair championship of the American contract Bridge League's Fall Nationals at the William Penn Hotel here tonight.

After the second semi-final session this afternoon the leaders were Eric Shepherd of Hamilton, Ont., and Franco Bandoni of Don Mills, Ont., with 501 match points, followed by Alan Sontag of New York and Eddie Kantar of Los Angeles, with 500½.

Marty Bergen of White Plains, N.Y., and Don Probst of Endwell, N.Y., had 499½; Larry Mori of Ann Arbor, Mich., and Russell Shoup of Dayton, Ohio, 494; Bob Wolf and Jim Hooker of Dallas, 489.

Dorothy Hayden Truscott of New York and Emma Jean Hawes of Fort Worth, two stars on the international women's scene who had led after the qualifying stage, remained in contention with 447½.

The blue ribbon deals, like most of those in tournament play, are generated by a computer. The diagramed example was therefore seized upon by those who propagate a popular myth: That computer deals are more likely to be distributional and freakish than those dealt manually.

Objective cases have repeatedly demonstrated that the computer products conform exactly to mathematical expectations, but it will sometimes turn up a freakish hand, as in this case, and it would be wrong if it did not.

Four Pairs Reach Slam

It is easy to see that North-South, with 19 high-card points between them, have no trouble at all in making a grand slam in spades. All the suits are under control, and two ruffs are enough to establish the hearts. But only four of the 10 pairs in the field succeeded in reaching seven spades and the majority got no further than game.

Almost all the South players opened one spade, after which a splinter response of four hearts, promising good spade support, at most a singleton heart, and some slam interest, gave the partnership a fair chance to reach the grand slam. At this point, South needed only to find his partner with the two black aces to make seven spades a good bet, but apparently most partnerships did not have the machinery to extract the necessary information.

One might think that successive cue-bids in diamonds, clubs and hearts would do the trick. North decide that the spade ace his partner is looking for.

system, they say. "If he [Chancellor Kibbee] can win, I think it's great," said Jacqueline G. Wexler, president of Hunter College. "But anyone would know that the odds are not overwhelming."

Mrs. Wexler said that although she supported the publicity campaign, which is tentatively called "Mobilization," she though "it is not enough."

'Rhetoric Misdirected'

"I believe we must have our priorities and we ought to say what must be preserved," Mrs. Wexler said.

Joseph S. Murphy, who is resigning as president of Queens College in December, had stronger words.

"Much of the rhetoric is misdirected," he said, characterizing the campaign as "rather belated."

Dr. Murphy had joined Mrs. Wexler last Sunday night in a private caucus to discuss the implications of Dr. Kibbee's new publicity campaign. The other participants reportedly were John W. Kneller, president of Brooklyn College, and Robert E. Marshak, president of City College.

They contended that the campaign was another form of the "stonewalling" position maintained in 1975 by Dr. Kibbee and the former chairman of the Board of Higher Education, Alfred A. Giardino, which resisted all budget cuts and drew the special wrath of the city, the state and the Emergency Financial Control Board.

One consequence of this was the proposed huge budget cuts by the city. Another was the appointment last summer of a new board dominated by nominees of Governor Carey, a severe critic of Dr. Kibbee in the past.

Yesterday, however, Chancellor Kibbee said that he disagreed with Mrs. Wexler's view concerning suggesting cutbacks and he also indicated that the board itself "supports the mobilization." Asked about a possible political battle with Governor Carey and the state, Dr. Kibbee replied: "We haven't gotten that far."

Key Committee Formed

What has been accomplished thus far, he said, was the establishment of a central committee consisting of some senior college presidents, faculty senate representatives and student delegates, to provide general direction to the campaign.

Specific tasks will be assigned to a "core" committee and the special effort on television, radio and in newspapers will be headed by Gerald W. Lynch, president of John Jay College of Criminal Justice.

About $20,000 had already been collected thus far from private contributions, from solicitations by the Friends of CUNY—a nonprofit group—but chiefly from money assessed on each of the 17 schools in the systems, according to Julius C. C. Edelstein, vice chancellor for urban affairs. This money was not derived from taxes, he said. The larger schools were assessed at about $7,500 and the smaller schools, $5,000.

Dr. Lynch disclosed that Tony Schwartz, the New York television producer who made the successful commercials credited with saving John Jay College last year from being merged into other schools, had donated his services.

Mr. Schwartz said in an interview last night that he was still doing research for his forthcoming commercials.

"I hope that all the people involved have the courage to fight the people they may have to fight in order to save the university," said Mr. Schwartz, who also produced the controversial nuclear cloud commercials in 1964 for President Lyndon B. Johnson in his race against Barry Goldwater.

Mrs. Grasso Doesn't Plan To Include Tax Increase In Budget for Connecticut

HARTFORD, Nov. 24 (AP)—Gov. Ella T. Grasso said today that she planned no tax increase for the coming budget and hoped to be able to lift some of the tax burden from businesses.

Speaking at a news conference, she also said she planned to give Connecticut's 40,000 state employees a pay rise in addition to restoring scheduled salary increases partially cut in 1975 to save the state money during a budget crunch.

The Governor said several weeks ago that she hoped to recommend that the 1977 General Assembly give businesses a tax cut, but was unsure whether the state's fiscal situation would allow one. Today she said she would not propose cutting business taxes if that meant other taxes would have to be raised.

Chances 'Good' for Raises

"I do not intend to submit a budget with tax increases," the Governor said. In response to a question, she said, "The chances are good for state employees getting a raise."

Mrs. Grasso will submit her proposed budget to the General Assembly in February. It is expected to hold state spending to below $2 billion, which would be about $200 million more than in the present state spending plan.

She would not say what form of business tax cut she would prefer or how much of a pay increase state employees could look for.

She added that some mechanism would have to be worked out to give the workers more money while they were bargaining with the state for pay increases and improved working conditions.

Toledo Bus Drivers End Strike

TOLEDO, Ohio, Nov. 24 (AP) — City buses were rolling again today for more than 63,000 daily riders as drivers ended a one-day strike after being assured that efforts would be made to curb student rowdyism. The 215 drivers who stayed off their jobs yesterday to protest what they termed unsafe working conditions voted to return to work after the chief of police outlined a plan to provide them with more protection.

I attempt to account for surprises in "Prejudice and for instance, Professor that Plato is largely mis- understood because for 2,000 years he's been read too literally, with the result "of an inestimable loss of intellectual pleasure in the Western world, and a disastrous weight of heaviness in the Western spirit"; or Professor Morse's categorical assertion that among those who have been deliberately guilty of inexcusable prejudice against Jews or women or both are such important writers as Eliot, Pound and Shakespeare.

All I can say is that Professor Morse is stimulating, refreshing, and above all unpredictable. He loathes authoritarianism, yet he can't abide the excesses of liberal education. He heaps angry scorn on the popular notion that the artist must be anti-bourgeois to achieve greatness, yet he clearly considers James Joyce, a paradigm of the anti-bourgeois writer, one of the greatest novelists in the English language. He loves literature, yet he is determined to subsume art under the category of moral conduct. Clearly, you can't turn J. Mitchell Morse into a generalization or a metaphor, except perhaps to say that he provides medicine for confused thinking.

Lack of Communication

As for Edwin Newman: In "A Civil Tongue," he also offers a diagnosis or two to account for why we Americans mistreat language so. We aren't thinking clearly. We don't really want to communicate (especially if we're politicians). We seek refuge in obfuscation because society demands that "we become more and more open about ourselves." And, like Professor Morse, Mr. Newman embraces the worthy principle that "we are all safer when language is specific. It improves our chances of knowing what is going on."

But for every ounce of diagnosis in "A Civil Tongue," there is a ton of symptom, which takes the form of page upon page of the sort of gobbledegook, jargon and outright nonsense that seems to be increasingly obstructing our attempts to talk with one another these days. And that ton weighs heavily on the reader. Certainly, one appreciates the points that Mr. Newman is making—that words such as "major, constituency, controversial, parameter, [and] hopefully" continue to extend their strangling reach; that the addition of prefixes and suffixes such as "de-," "non-," "un-," "-ize," "-wise," "-ee," and "-ed" (as in "Nadia Comaneci was medaled") tend to constitute high crimes and misdemeanors against innocent and useful word elements; that most sportscasters should be sent back to grade school to start over, along with all politicians and bureaucrats that insist on imitating them; and that redundancy is rampant everywhere. And I guess one enjoys Mr. Newman's punning humor, though it gets predictable rather too quickly.

Still, the objective fact is that, what with all the symptoms, over 50 percent of "A Civil Tongue" is composed of the most tortured language imaginable. Regardless of its purpose, that much bad writing is enough to make a reader sick.

DELIBERATIONS GO ON IN MOSQUE MURDER

Judge Asks the Jury to Continue for Ninth Day After a Break for Holiday in Harlem Case

The jury at the Harlem mosque trial sat down to its eighth day of deliberations yesterday, and after two jurors said they thought there was still hope of reaching a verdict, the presiding judge ruled that deliberations would continue after a day's recess for Thanksgiving.

The decision by Justice Martin Evans in State Supreme Court came as defense and prosecution lawyers agreed to replace one of the jurors, a cab driver, with the last of four alternates, a teacher.

The cab driver has been cited in a note to the judge as being responsible for bogging down the deliberations. He was the second juror to be replaced since deliberations began.

The trial, which began Aug. 2, involves the fatal shooting of Officer Philip W. Cardillo during a melee at Muhammad's Mosque No. 7 on April 14, 1972. Lewis 17X Dupree, dean of boys at the mosque at that time, was charged with the murder.

"I'm not going to declare a mistrial," Justice Evans told the jury. "To have a second trial is a tremendous burden to the lawyers, as well as a tremendous burden to the state."

According to figures compiled by the State Office of Court Administration, a sequestered jury costs approximately $515 a day, including meals, transportation and hotel accommodations. Court experts estimate that a 16-week trial such as the mosque case can run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. The cost of the 8,500-page transcript alone was more than $15,000.

At 11:55 A.M., Justice Evans called the jurors one by one into his robing room. Fifteen minutes later he told lawyers that 10 of the jurors had thought they were hopelessly deadlocked, but that two had said there was hope for a verdict.

In addition, Justice Evans said he received a note from one of the jurors saying that the cab driver, Nemesia Arroya, refused to deliberate with the other jurors. Lawyers for both sides then consented to have Mr. Arroya replaced. But, later that afternoon after deliberations with the new juror had begun, defense lawyers moved for a mistrial on the ground that Mr. Dupree had not consented to the replacement. Justice Evans denied the motion.

Capt. Bligh's Notebook Auctioned for $91,000

LONDON, Nov. 24 (AP)—"Just before sun rise the People mutinied, seizing me while I slept in my Cabin."

A stained notebook with those words brought $91,000 at auction today for it holds Capt. James Bligh's account in his spidery handwriting of the mutiny on the British ship Bounty in 1789 and his 45-day ordeal at sea in an open boat.

The existence of the leather-bound pocket notebook was made public only recently. Sold by Christie's for an anonymous descendant of Bligh, it was snapped up in 55 seconds by the London booksellers Maggs Brothers for an anonymous buyer.

Sold with the book were three leaves of British Admiralty foolscap densely covered with unflattering descriptions of Fletcher Christian and the other mutineers who set Captain Bligh and 18 loyal crewmen adrift on a 3,500-mile journey from the mid-Pacific to Timor, in what was then called the East Indies.

Bligh, who was portrayed as a cruel tyrant in the Nordhoff and Hall book "Mutiny on the Bounty" and in two movies, has been rehabilitated in recent years by historians who found him kinder to his men than most British captains of the time.

Sadly, every Thanksgiving thousands of people buy turkeys at stereo sales.

Announcing Tech Hifi's Thanksgiving Sale. With a "Turkey-Proof" Guarantee.

About this time of year, lots of stores start advertising huge "stereo sales with really big savings." It sounds good on paper, but once you get to those stores you usually discover that those big savings only apply to lo-fi compacts "with all the trimmings," or discontinued components that have been taking up space in the stockroom for months. In other words, "turkeys."

That's why it's a better idea to come in to Tech Hifi... where you always get big savings on the kind of components that do justice to your favorite music. We carry over one hundred of the best names in stereo, and we guarantee you the lowest prices... even when other stores are having a "sale." (The massive buying power of our fifty-four stores makes this possible.)

Stereo systems you can be proud of.

For no more money than many of those "turkey" systems gobble up, you can come in to Tech Hifi and get a quality music system featuring components from three of the most respected companies in the business: Pioneer, KLH, and BSR. The Pioneer SX 434 stereo receiver delivers ample power for the KLH 100 two-way loudspeakers to achieve truly impressive levels of volume, with very little distortion. A reliable BSR 2260 BX automatic turntable with a base, dust-cover and ADC induced-magnetic cartridge complete this value-packed system.

Cause to Give Thanks

In his two terms as President, Thomas Jefferson refused to issue the annual Thanksgiving Proclamation that had already come to be a Presidential ritual. A reading of the often pompous sermonettes that have over the years emanated from the White House gives some justification for Jefferson's view of such official notices as a "monarchical practice."

It is not, however, the official proclamation that matters. It is a natural human trait to seek comfort and hope from a periodic acknowledgment of past blessings. It is good to look back for an accounting of the things that did go right. To concentrate only on shortcomings in our personal and national lives distorts the true condition as much as a panglossian view of reality.

Millions remain unemployed; too many suffer the indignities of discrimination; others face illness with dread of financial ruin and old age in fear of loneliness. For their sake, Thanksgiving must not be allowed to degenerate into smug self-satisfaction.

But while renewing their pledge to eliminate want and injustice, the majority of Americans have cause today to be grateful for the fulfillment of that hope expressed in 1789 by George Washington in the nation's first Presidential Thanksgiving Proclamation—a prayer for "an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness."

Establishing such a government might have been easier than perpetuating it. In 1976, the United States again reaped the priceless benefits of that government's continuity. Having weathered the political crisis of Watergate, the resignation of a President under threat of impeachment and the criminal conviction of unprecedented numbers of top officials, Americans can look back with relief and gratitude to the re-establishment of faith in the political process—made easier by the basic decency and unpretentious character of President Ford, which never showed itself to better advantage than in these last days of his Administration. The people of this country can be proud of the orderly routine of transition, as the election victory of Jimmy Carter transfers the Presidency from one man and one party to another.

Whatever the shortcomings of the American system, the people of this Republic have once again played their decisive part in the unbroken succession of their governance. And they have done so, as the story of Jimmy Carter proves, without having to confine their choice to candidates presented to them by the elders of the political system.

There is cause for thanksgiving, too, that the narrow margin of the voters' verdict has not raised the specter of governmental impotence, as it might in other countries. Some esoteric punditry notwithstanding, the American people once again consider the voice of the majority final, giving the next President the necessary mandate to speak for them.

In a world that finds democracy embattled, Americans clearly have cause to be thankful for the demonstration of representative government in action provided this week when Messrs. Ford and Carter met in the White House, not as vanquished and victor, but as responsible outgoing and incoming trustees of the general welfare, upholding the founders' pledge "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our descendants."

Progress in UNESCO

In a low-keyed opening address at the general conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in Nairobi early this month, Ambassador John Reinhardt of the United States made an eloquent plea for halting the politicization of UNESCO and returning the agency to the specialized work implied by its title. The conference has not attained that lofty objective, but it has brought UNESCO part of the way back.

Israel has been restored to full UNESCO membership and admitted to participation in the agency's European regional group from which it was barred in a 1974 action initiated by the Arab states and supported by other third-world countries as well as by the Soviet bloc. Although the issue has not been completely resolved, an initial Soviet-led attempt to ram through a declaration that would have sanctioned and encouraged state control of the press was overwhelmingly rejected.

These commendable decisions were offset by condemnation of Israel's educational and cultural policies in occupied territories including Jerusalem. The adoption of the critical resolutions was widely regarded as the price paid for Arab and Soviet-bloc acquiescence in Israel's reinstatement. Yet one encouraging aspect at Nairobi was the rising concern exhibited by third-world nations that politicization and extremism would destroy UNESCO, whose assistance they value.

UNESCO is worth saving, and the struggle for its immunization from destructive politics must continue. Israel had conditionally agreed to accept a commission of independent experts to examine its educational and cultural practices in the occupied territories; it ought to do so despite the unfair prejudgment at Nairobi. In light of Israel's reinstatement, the United States might well consider resumption of payment of its dues—suspended in 1974—which account for nearly a quarter of the agency's modest budget.

Strauss Breaks Away

West Germany's Franz-Josef Strauss has threatened in the past to end the electoral and parliamentary alliance of his Bavarian-based Christian Social Union with the larger Christian Democratic Union. Now the ambitious former Defense and Finance Minister has broken up the 27-year-old tandem in an action widely interpreted as a last desperate bid to salvage whatever chance he may have to become Chancellor of the Federal Republic.

Mr. Strauss denies that he intends to try to make the C.S.U. a national party and says it will continue to join with the Christian Democrats in opposition to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's governing coalition of Social and Free Democrats. But his decision has the effect of making the Social Democrats the biggest party in the Bundestag.

During the recent election campaign, the volatile, ultraconservative Mr. Strauss could barely conceal his contempt for the more moderate stance of his Christian Democratic coalition partner, Helmut Kohl. After their coalition had failed narrowly to unseat Mr. Schmidt's Government, Mr. Strauss pointed out that his party had swept Bavaria with 62 percent of the vote, compared with 48.6 percent countrywide for the losers.

In many ways, Franz-Josef Strauss was one of the more talented young German politicians to emerge after the creation of the Federal Republic in 1949. But his pursuit of political enemies beyond the law forced Konrad Adenauer to dismiss him as Defense Minister in 1962; and a later comeback as Finance Minister ended with the victory of Social and Free Democrats in 1969.

It is difficult to see how his decision to break with the Christian Democrats and go it alone can advance his personal political fortunes or even give "more punch" to the conservative cause in West Germany, as he envisions. In the long run it may be healthy for the Christian Democrats not to have to placate Mr. Strauss. For now, his move unquestionably has the effect of shoring up the Government of his arch-enemy, Helmut Schmidt.

The 'Transition'

"Transition" has become the fashionable word in Washington. The interval between the election in early November and the inauguration of the new President on Jan. 20 was once a mere time-span in which the President-elect chose his Cabinet and personal staff. It has evolved into an elaborate process in which scores of individuals are involved, the names and qualifications of thousands of others are being sorted out by computer, and $2 million will be expended.

As with most other human endeavors, Parkinson's Law applies to the transition. The amount of work needed to be done to insure a smooth transfer of power from the Ford to the Carter Administration is sure to expand in proportion to the number of people working on the transition and the amount of money available.

It is reasonable to question whether all this effort and money will be well spent. The appointment of an eleven-person advisory committee to offer consultation on major appointments has the quality of a public relations exercise with members carefully chosen to represent men and women, blacks and whites, academics and businessmen. It can, of course, be argued that successful political leadership by its very nature requires this kind of balancing act and public gestures to various constituencies.

Of greater significance is the preparation of position papers by the transition staff and by members of the Ford Administration. To a limited extent, such memoranda are useful and necessary; but what strong Cabinet officer would not want to organize and direct personally the preparation of papers affecting his own department? Policy formation involves not only bureaucratic expertise but also the moral values, political judgment and intellectual style of those ultimately chosen to decide and defend the major actions of government.

The appointment of 131 persons as transition aides, many of them in their late twenties and early thirties, also poses hazards. These individuals—and their friends whom they will recruit for jobs—may well preëmpt the key positions at the second and third levels in each department. They are getting themselves entrenched before the heads of these departments have even been chosen. Unless the new Cabinet members are exceptionally vigilant and tough infighters, they may find themselves prisoners of personal and ideological cliques before they ever settle into the routines of power.

This risk exists potentially in every department. It is a special danger in the State Department. Many of the younger foreign-policy experts who have made their reputations in the last ten to fifteen years had their political outlook and even their personal identities shaped by a single trauma—Vietnam. It is all the more important that the rage, guilt, frustration and confusion engendered by that event not distort American foreign policy in the next Administration.

If the men of the Johnson-Rusk-Rostow generation made the mistake of transposing the Munich experience to Southeast Asia where it was irrelevant, President-elect Carter must not become the victim of a new generation of policymakers who transpose the Vietnam experience to other problems and regions of the world where it may be equally irrelevant. To avoid that danger, the new Administration needs to draw upon men and women of varying ages and from a wide spectrum of experience.

The President-elect is communicating a useful impression of openness and caution in approaching his enormous responsibilities. The dangers inherent in this transition process may not materialize. But the central truth remains that forming an Administration is a political act. It is not a neutral undertaking to be carried out by little-known experts with computers and opinion papers. When the President-elect has made the crucial political decisions involved in choosing his principal Cabinet officers, only then can the formation of the new Administration really begin.

How Not to Save the 50-Cent Fare

To the Editor:

David Yunich's proposals for drastically cutting mass-transit service in order to save the 50-cent fare show the bankruptcy of current leadership in providing decent mass transit in this region.

As outlined recently to the state's Emergency Financial Control Board, the M.T.A. proposes to eliminate weekend bus service, reduce after-midnight subway service to once an hour, eliminate many subway and bus runs totally and drop such services as half-fare transfers and shopping fares. The results will be financial disaster for stores and cultural institutions. But more than that, the move will severely damage the quality of life in the city. We cannot permit this to go forward.

The following steps must be implemented:

- The M.T.A. must renegotiate its contract with the Transport Workers Union to permit serious cost-cutting steps to be implemented at once.
- The incoming Carter Administration and the Congress must move to modify the operating-assistance program so that urban centers such as New York receive mass-transit assistance in proportion to our user population, rather than our total population, as is currently the case.
- We must take a serious look at a regional transit tax. There are several potential forms for this tax, including a sales tax, payroll tax, income surtax and increased bridge and tunnel tolls. Numerous other regions around the country already employ this approach. Not only would this provide the needed funds, it would also distribute the costs more equitably and permit part of the cost to be transferred to the Federal Government in the form of deductions on the Federal income tax.

If we do not act now, it is clear that our mass-transit system and with it the city and the region are going to go down the drain.

The Fields of Crosses

To the Editor:

In his Op-Ed essay on Armistice Day ("The Poppies. The Stillness."), Jerry Klein beautifully conveyed the heartfelt sensations one gets when visiting the cemeteries of the world wars. I, too, went to Belleau Wood and to Verdun, overcome by the silence and the memories as I moved among the vast fields of crosses. I, too, cried for these lost generations—as I cry now for the return of those ideals for which they died so long ago.

As a start, our political leaders must not tamper with the calendar but must allow the eleventh day of November to remain, now and forever, a day of prayer, meditation and remembrance. Maybe then our young people of today would recognize and comprehend the meaning of "some corner of a foreign field" and cherish the ideals and memories of those youths who made the supreme sacrifice.

Give-Away Idea

To the Editor:

What did you throw away today? What did your company throw away today? It's a disheartening paradox that today, as the poor get poorer and the rich get poorer, too, tons of usable materials are being buried as garbage in landfills.

Companies who hand out samples of products send the leftovers to the dump instead of calling, say, the county home, where the detergents or hand creams or bars of soap would help a struggling budget. Stores, even in small towns, dump fifty to sixty pairs of shoes when the season changes, along with shirts or jackets or other wearables. What community volunteer organization wouldn't be thrilled to tuck these in holiday boxes going to families in need?

It might take two minutes for the executive in charge to think of who could use the goods. A quick phone call, and the company's image is transformed from dirty trash-maker to spirited gift-creator. Solitary citizens, too, might think a minute before tossing anything that is still in recognizable form. Friends of mine had quite a bit more sand than they needed for bricking a patio. They called the city recreation department, which not only happily accepted what was in the driveway but also swept the sand out of the lawn.

It's a small thing, a give-away idea, but added up, it's a dump-truck load of neighborliness and public welfare.

A Job Action Gone Awry

To the Editor:

Your Nov. 6 editorial points out the irony of a police job action which enforces traffic laws to gain a more advantageous union contract. This brings to mind a situation in Stamford a few years ago. The police made a similar effort to bring pressure on the Mayor by vigorously handing out summonses for traffic infractions, including speeding, running red lights, etc. The injury rate from automobile accidents promptly dropped drastically. Through letters to the local newspaper, the citizens applauded the job action and urged the police to continue their good work. Needless to add, the job action was abandoned.

Angola: As the Struggle Continues

To the Editor:

"No Joy in Angola" (Nov. 15) was an excellent editorial and an accurate description of much of Angola. On a visit to Angola shortly after the coup in Lisbon (April 25, 1974) I saw the Angolans' joy mounting, and it reached its heights in early 1975 as the three liberation movements formed a transitional government.

However, the struggle for power between the movements soon turned into open warfare, which invited foreign intervention. The Russian and Cuban intervention was more effective than that of Zaire, the United States, China and South Africa, so the M.P.L.A. became the Government of Angola.

The three movements — M.P.L.A., F.N.L.A. and UNITA — are not simply recent political organizations formed to fight against Portuguese colonialism. They represent regional and cultural interests of the three principal parts of the territory which combined into one colony in the course of five centuries of violent history.

This historical fact leads me to challenge one word in your editorial, "pro-Western" as you applied it to UNITA. At one phase of its history, UNITA was characterized as the "pro-Chinese" movement. UNITA is not primarily pro-Western or pro-Chinese. It is representative of the interests of the largest single bloc of the peoples of central and southern Angola—perhaps 40 percent of the total population.

I certainly found "No Joy in Central Angola" when I was back there in June and July of this year. The peoples were carrying on active and passive resistance against the M.P.L.A. Government and its Cuban and Russian supporters. The peoples of central Angola do not deny the legitimacy of M.P.L.A. as a political movement, but they claim the right to choose their own movement which will have representation in the government of an independent Angola.

M.P.L.A. claims to base its program on People Power (Poder Popular). Could not the peoples of central Angola also claim to be using People Power as they resist a minority government which has been recognized by almost every nation except the United States and China? Will they be able to defeat an army of well-trained Cuban troops with Russian equipment? Can guerrilla bands withstand bombing and napalm attacks from an air force?

Even if there is no joy in Central Angola, there is still a good deal of courage and determination as the people struggle for self-determination through UNITA.

A 'Bad' Tax Law

Red Grover, on Thanksgiving

A Short Play

By Preston Jones

The play takes place in the Dixie Dinette, a favorite eatery for many of the fine citizens of Bradleyville, a small West Texas town. The Dixie Dinette is run by Arch and Clovis Ritchie. Arch does the cookin' and Clovis does the waitressin'. Arch learned his trade in the Navy and she learned hers by bein' the oldest in a family of 12. As the scene opens, it is eight o'clock on the mornin' of Thanksgivin' Day. Clovis is stackin' small boxes of cornflakes, when the door opens and Olin Potts and Rufe Phelps, two of the town locals, enter.

Olin: Put on the coffee, Clovis, you got two customers here!

Clovis: Big deal.

Rufe: (looking into a dingy plastic cake box on the counter) Hey, Clovis, is this the same piece of cake that was here three weeks ago?

Clovis: Probably. You want it?

Olin: (joining Rufe) That cake keeps gettin' smaller and smaller and that fly in there keeps gettin' bigger and bigger.

Rufe: That's the biggest damn fly I've ever seen.

Olin: Hell, that ain't no fly. That's a short big-eyed cake-eatin' buzzard.

Clovis: (serving the coffee) You guys are about as funny as a fried mule.

Rufe: Speakin' of fried mule, what you all got on the menu for Thanksgivin' dinner today?

Clovis: (calling out back) Hey, Arch, what are we servin' for dinner today?

Arch: (calling back from the kitchen) Stewed armadillo and boiled okrie in cold mustard sauce.

Clovis: There you go, boys.

Olin: He's kiddin' ain't he?

Rufe: Not if I know this dump he ain't.

The door opens and Red Grover, the proprietor of Red's Place, the local beer bar, enters.

Red: Gimme some coffee, Clovis, and keep it comin'. Gawd, I'm bushed.

Olin: Have a big night last night, Red?

Red: Ever' damn fool in town was in there drinkin' beer like it was goin' out of style. I was up at six o'clock this mornin' pullin' drunks out of everywhere but the cracks in the walls.

Clovis: Well, hell, Red, it's the holiday season.

Red: Who gives a damn?

Clovis: What I mean is that folks are wantin' to celebrate.

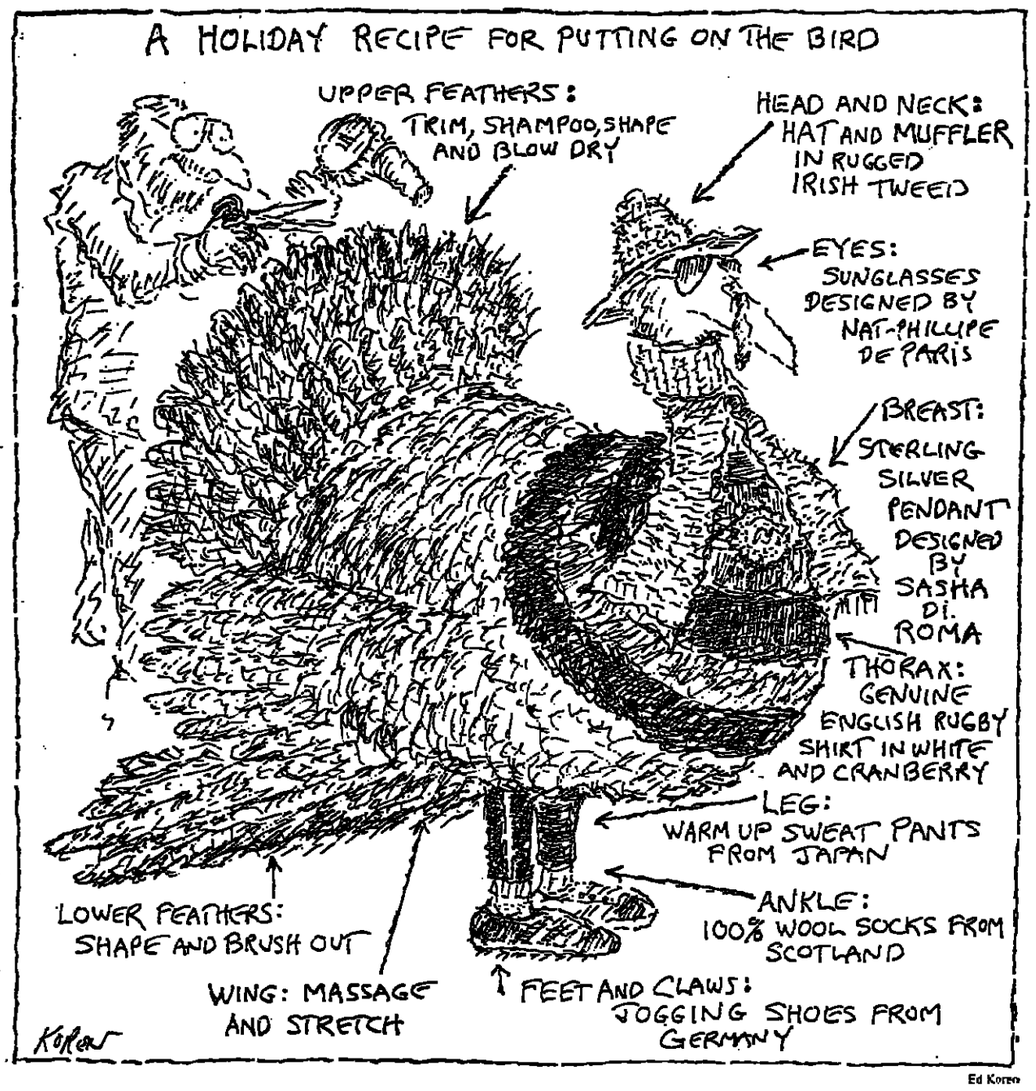
Red: Celebrate what? Celebrate the beginnin' of about five weeks of pure baloney? Cause that's all it is. The beginnin' of a great big sloppy sentimental expensive binge. Thanksgivin' Day, hell! They ought to call it Football Day or Hangover Day or, even better than that, call it local Jay Cee Hangin' the Christmas Decorations Day. By the time Christmas gets here, the damn things will all be blown down but the stores will be sold out, so what the hell?

Olin: Now, Red, there ain't no call to talk thataway. We're goin' to have a real good feed over to my place today. Rufe here and Sara Beth are comin' over. Why don't you come along too?

Red: Real good feed? That sounds like you and Rufe went out and poached some wild turkeys off the Kinkaid Ranch again. Now there's somethin' to be thankful for. Two shotguns, a pair of wirecutters, and a bright moonlight night.

Rufe: We never done no such thing!

Olin: Hell no, we never! We trapped them turkeys fair and square right over there by Lake Bradleyville.



Ed Koren

Red: Trapped 'em! Boy, that's bein' fair and square, all right.

Rufe: It's the best way. When you trap 'em, they don't get full of buckshot.

Red: Thank you, oh Lord, for the broken tooth that I ain't about to receive.

Olin: Well, he ain't goin' to receive nothin' from me 'cause I'm takin' back my dinner invite!

Red: Well, now, thank ya, Olin. That's plum Christian of ya.

Olin: What the hell has Christian got to do with Thanksgivin' dinner?

Red: You got a point there, Olin. I can't think of one single Christian thing. Unless of course S.M.U. plays Notre Dame in the football game today. (He starts to laugh.) Boy, that's somethin' else that really pops my balloon.

Clovis: What's that?

Red: All this happy horsehockey about pullin' one day out of the year to bow your head, fold your hands, and give thanks. For 364 days, people sit around and cuss everythin' that moves and then the Government comes up with a bill or some damn thing that says such-and-such day in November is Thanksgivin'. So, look out, Lord, here it comes! A great old big country full of greasy stuffin' smellin' thanks.

Olin: I didn't mean that Thanksgivin' weren't Christian. I just meant that you didn't have to be one to do it.

Red: Do what?

Rufe: Eat, you damn fool!

Olin: Dammit, I didn't mean that either. All I meant was (pause)—aw to hell with it, I'm goin' home.

Rufe: Wait up, I'll come with ya. (He puts some coins on the counter.) That extra dime is for that there piece of cake. Olin and me sure would like for Red there to have it. (They exit.)

Clovis: You want the cake?

Red: Hell, no.

Clovis: Well, then, how about some more coffee.

Red: Why not? I'm goin' to be sick anyway.

For Active Opposition

By William Safire

DALLAS—The Democratic Ins have 2,200 slots to fill, and the Republican Outs have only one. Curiously, political interest focuses on who shall be the chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Mary Louise Smith, the caretaker's caretaker, has stepped aside, sparing herself and her President the ignominy of ouster. The first question to be considered is: What sort of party leader should the Republicans have to speak up for the loyal opposition in the Carter years—a party professional, or a potential candidate?

The best answer is neither. The choice of a political technician—whether a John Sears or Richard Richards from the Reagan side or Jim Baker from the Ford camp—would be a misreading of the role of party leader in opposition.

The problem Republicans face is not the need to build a "grassroots organization at the local level," which we have never done, to operate as a kind of disgruntled underground. On the contrary, we need a vigorous voice that can cut through the bomfog of consensus to make a partisan issue now and then. If television is wise, 'tis folly to be Bliss.

Ordinarily, the best voices of opposition are to be found in the Congress, particularly the Senate. But the minority leader is likely to be Thomas Griffin or Howard Baker, cautious pols whose every second paragraph begins "on the other hand." Oregon's Bob Packwood would make a sensible and even a daring choice, offering new hope to a party whose future is rooted in the West, but Senate Republicans are likely to choose lackluster leadership.

In this vacuum, who is there to make the case for The Cause? Here in Texas, the name of John Connally springs readily to the lips, and it is a post he is eager to fill. But Mr. Connally is a certain contender for the 1980 nomination. His task is to stay visible on his own, generating his I.O.U.'s by campaigning for local candidates in 1978 to put a crimp in any rubber-stamp Congress. It would be unfair to hand him what little party apparatus the Republicans now have.

Same with Ronald Reagan. He has a newspaper and broadcasting forum, and can be expected to speak out forcefully. Too old for '80? Malarky—you're as old as you feel, and he feels fine. Mr. Reagan represents the center of the Republican Party (Charles Percy to the near-left, Jesse Helms to the far right) and the national chairman must be acceptable to him. But it should not be Reagan himself, or anyone beholden to him.

If not a potential 1980 candidate (too high a profile) and not a technician (too low a profile)—then who?

Somebody in his 40's; articulate, well-versed in the issues, with experience in government; acceptable party-wide; good debater, good organizer.

At least three men fit that bill:

Defense Secretary Rumsfeld of Illinois, former Congressman and NATO ambassador. But he now has the long-postponed chance to go out and make some money in business before reentering politics. It also might be a mistake to preclude a 1980 Rumsfeld run for the roses—he could pull a Carter.

Gov. Dan Evans of Washington. He will be leaving the governorship next month, and seeks the national chairmanship. Drawbacks: little background for foreign-policy criticism and might not have the necessary conservative fire in the belly.

Senator Bill Brock of Tennessee has everything going for him, including inspirational appeal and personal wealth, but he lost in this year's landslide for Carter in Tennessee.

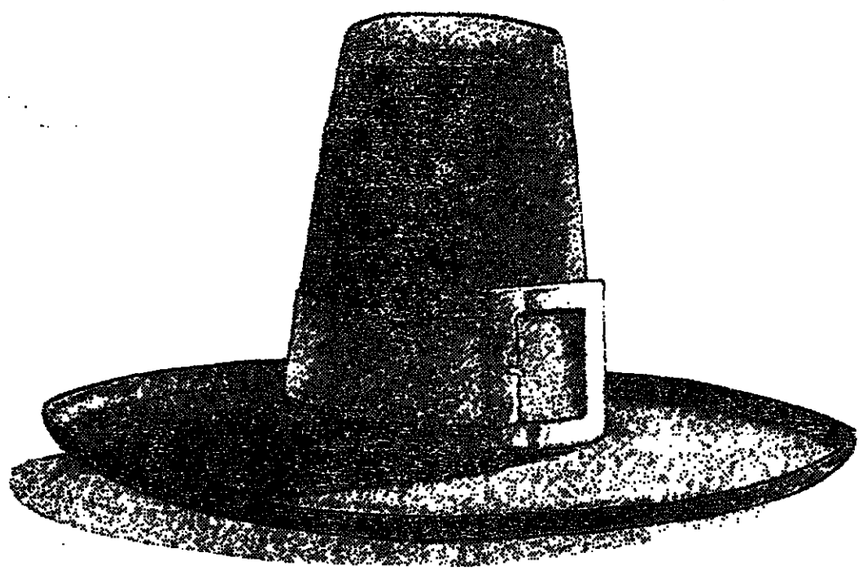
Mr. Brock looks very good to a great many Republicans. In politics, losing once is an asset, not a liability—there's no other short course in humility like it, and most successful politicians are those who have been able to come back. Brock will surely be back, but not for President in 1980—and therein lies the possibility of getting a long-term commitment from him for the rebuilding of the party and the reassertion of its conservatism.

Whoever is chosen must be someone who can quickly put an end to the handwringing and crepehanging. It may be that less than 20 percent of the voters call themselves Republicans—but the man running on that line this year received 48 percent of the vote. It may be that the party failed abysmally to recapture seats in the Congress—but in two years, the coming split between the Democratic President and the Democratic Congress will offer a golden opportunity to recoup.

For a time, the new Administration will wrap its activities in pseudo-conservative rhetoric. Only last week, the President-elect tried to suggest that high unemployment is a "likely prospect" for years, until forced publicly to recant and to pledge the spending needed to slash unemployment substantially soon.

Alphonse Allais, a 19th-century French journalist whose works are now being rediscovered, predicted the future for these new Georgetown Georgians: "There comes a moment at every dinner party when the conversation becomes almost impossibly liberal."

That moment will come soon enough. And when the Government in Washington slips the ideological moorings of the people who sent it there, the nation will need a political party—and a strong voice at the head of its National Committee—able to orchestrate the alternatives offered by a kind of shadow cabinet, unafraid to be principled, passionate and partisan.



Today we're wearing a slightly different hat.

For almost five years now, we've used this space to express ourselves on matters important to the nation, the economy, and —inevitably—Mobil.

This week, Thanksgiving is what matters most. All we want to say is: have a warm and happy one.

Americans to Eat Turkey With Bicentennial Dressing

By LAURIE JOHNSON

Prepared to celebrate whatever they have harvested from the Bicentennial year, Americans will gather around mostly bountiful boards today for the first national day of Thanksgiving since crossing what President Ford called in his holiday proclamation "the treshold into our third century."

New York area residents, all but guaranteed a day of cold sunshine by the National Weather Service, could look forward to the city's most famous attraction of the day, the Macy's parade, either in its fiberglass-and-helium actuality or on television, beginning at 9:15 A.M. Predictions were that the weather would bring unusually large crowds to the line of march from 77th Street and Central Park West, through Columbus Circle and down Broadway to 34th Street.

Some of the best eye-level views of the giant balloons will be given to up to 800 mentally and physically handicapped children, watching from upper floors of the Minskoff and National Theaters, 1 Times Square Plaza and 1350 Broadway. Arrangements to bring the children from state and private institutions were made by Hospital Audiences, a group that provides entertainment for various institutions. Harlem Hospital, although unable to afford buses—especially the vans needed for its wheelchair patients—planned to bring all 65 children by subway, with attendants carefully handing the wheelchairs up and down the subway steps.

Design and Construction

Perhaps not even the widest-eyed youngster was happier to see the day come than Manfred Bass, who for 16 years has been in charge of design and construction for the parade floats. He works for Macy's full-time, heading a staff grown to 15 as the parade date nears, in a Hoboken, N. J., "studio" that is a half-block long.

Mr. Bass never sees the parade except on a videotape replay several days later. Before dawn he shepherds Mother Goose, Humpty Dumpty and other larger-than-life immortals to Manhattan—disassembled sufficiently to pass through the 13-foot opening of the Lincoln Tunnel. After seeing the floats off at the head of the line of march, Mr. Bass hustles to 34th Street and Broadway to supervise their preparation for storage. The 41-year-old former storybook illustrator developed a desire to "sculpt on a large scale" and considers his work "pop" art.

"When the floats and, of course, the balloons are glistening in early-morning sun in New York," said Mr. Bass, "I feel like the whole world is blooming."

Milton Berle, George Jessel, Donald O'Connor and The Inkspots got the jump on the holiday with a pre-Thanksgiving dinner served on a Long Island Rail Road car. The car was bound from Pennsylvania Station to Huntington, L.I., near where their "old-timey" vaudeville-style show was to be presented last night at Hauppauge High School.

Mr. Berle and Mr. O'Connor mugged it up over the leg of a 30-pound turkey. Mr. Jessel, his fingers glistening with

A Four-Day Weekend

A four-day Thanksgiving weekend lies ahead for many New Yorkers. The public schools and Board of Education offices will be closed today and tomorrow. Libraries, banks, department stores and most other businesses and offices will be closed today, along with stock and commodity exchanges.

Only special-delivery mail will be delivered on the holiday and only the General Post Office, Eighth Avenue at 33d Street, will be open, with operation limited to its self-service section. Subways, buses and commuter railroads of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority will be on Sunday or holiday schedules today, with half-fares in effect.

eet the Real Georgia: u May Be Surprised

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES JR.

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Nov. 23—What is the rest of the nation, the non-South, to make of all these Georgians soon to march north?

Must everyone plant a magnolia? Or learn to eat Moon Pies and drink R C (pronounce it are-uh cee) Cola?

Relax, would-be crackers.

The truth about the invaders lies somewhere between Margaret Mitchell's antebellum aristocrats, with their white columns and black mammies, and Erskine Caldwell's trashy folk in the sharecropper's shack down at the end of Tobacco Road, where the hard surface turns to rutted red clay.

In fact, a good case can be made that James Earl Carter Jr. is your prototypical, mean-average, 1976 Georgian.

A fellow who has taken to drinking Scotch whisky, but still says "Eye-talyun," is a worthy representative of a state that once was notoriously rustic but more recently has become half urban.

Those who would assay the cracker intruders should not underestimate the effects that this urbanization, and Scotch, have had on Georgia of late.

Not even Henry Grady, the late Atlanta publisher, envisioned the kind of new state that was about to send a peanut farmer to Washington to run what some New York advertising wag has tagged "The Gooberment." Some lingering Yankee perceptions need to be adjusted.

Extensive Urbanization

Georgia is no longer just peaches, peanuts, pellagra, chain gangs, Coca-Cola (pronounced Co-Coler) and kudzu plants.

James Dickey was wrong when he delivered himself of his book about thick-wristed, slack-jawed idiots trying to tip Burt Reynolds out of his canoe.

One of every three Georgians now lives in Atlanta (pronounced 'Lanter), a once-drowsy southern state capital that has developed into a cosmopolitan regional center that boasts of becoming "the world's next great city."

No other Dixie capital dominates the politics, economy and culture of its state so pervasively as hard-bustling Atlanta dominates Georgia. The city draws its work force from more than 50 surrounding counties. Its television penetrates living rooms from the mountains to the sea.

Atlanta has skyscrapers, a black mayor and ice hockey. Fiddle-dee-dee, Miss Scarlett, fiddle-dee-dee, Miss Scarlett, it's (pronounced: hits) reached the point that four out of five people on the street here were born somewhere else —pluperfect strangers.

'Peach State' Dropped

Beyond Atlanta, Georgia has changed so much that "Peach State" recently was dropped from its auto tags. Chickens have become the top farm crop.

Cotton now represents less than 5 percent of agricultural income. Many old plantations (pronounced: plan-nations) have been turned over to Georgia pulp pine, an increasingly important business (pronounced: bid-niz).

Industry is popping up all over—zipper factories back in the Appalachian hollows of north Georgia, shirt factories out on the red clay edges of farm towns in south Georgia, chemical plants down in the lowlands along the Atlantic Coast.

So far this year, capital investment throughout the state exceeds $750 million. More than 18,000 new jobs have been created.

Of course, some of the old Georgia remains.

One of every five of the state's residents still lives in the sort of poverty that drove Erskine Caldwell to the typewriter. Nationally, only one of every eight Americans lives in poverty.

Georgia schools still lag. Two of every three students score below the national average whenever standardized achievement tests are administered.

"Not a proud record," says Gov. George Busbee.

School Integration Avoided

White Georgians have accepted desegregation of public places and have sent a black, Andrew Young, to Congress. But they still flee to suburbs and "segregation academies" to avoid school integration.

Some still do not want blacks in their churches. Witness the recent squabble at the Plains Baptist Church, where the congregation finally responded to Mr. Carter's encouragement and voted to allow blacks to join.

A few big-bellied deputy sheriffs are still out there, chuckling into their CB's as they cruise main highways that would be back roads north of the Mason-Dixon.

Drive careful, good buddie, y-heah.

There are still some high spirited old boys slouched in gasoline stations in little towns like Plains, swilling "PBR" (that's Georgian for Pabst Blue Ribbon) and talking 10th grade. Jimmy Carter's brother, Billie, is one of them.

"I've never trusted a Scotch drinker," he says.

The Cocksure Crackers

He need not fret.

Even with Brother Jimmy's switch to Scotch and the White House, Georgia remains basically a cracker state. This is something that goes beyond urbanization and the so-called "Americanization of Dixie."

"You've got to keep in mind the real definition of 'cracker,'" says Delma E. Presley, a native Georgian who teaches English at Georgia Southern College in Statesboro.

Despite popular usage, he notes, having just completed a study of "cracker," the word does not have anything to do with rednecks or white trash or the myth that the state was settled by convicts. That incorrect usage stems, in large part, from the fact that Georgia has always had more than enough poverty and put-upon folks, even before Sherman marched through, and crackers initially were poor and put-upon.

"The term 'cracker' actually traces back to the Scottish word 'crack,' which means 'boast,'" Mr. Presley says. "The people who settled much of the state were Scotch-Irish pioneers from the North Carolina and Tennessee mountains, rough-cut frontiersmen, poor but outspokenly proud and sure of themselves.

"They were too proud and cocksure in the eyes of the earlier, established settlers, who came in through Savannah. So they got labeled 'crackers' as they began taking over, and they were treated like rank outsiders and made to struggle and scratch for everything they got."

Phinizy Spalding, a native-born Atlantan who teaches Georgia history at the University of Georgia in Athens, contends that even his hometown is "thoroughly cracker, a cracker town."

"Look at the way its Chamber of Commerce boasts about being one of the world's best cities," he said. "Look at the way its builders and bankers push, push, push."

Could it be that the city is reacting to the results of Sherman's torch, to the trauma of having to struggle up, Phoenix-like, from the ashes of defeat?

Delma Presley thinks not.

"Mainly," he says, "it's the cracker coming out, the cocksure pride of having fought from the bottom to the top on your own. That's essential cracker."

By that definition, Jimmy Carter and his triumphant Washington-bound band are crackers without peers.

LEGION ILLNESS STUDY DEFENDED BY U.S. AIDE

But Head of Disease Center Finds Nation Lacks Capacity to Deal With Ailments Caused by Toxins

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 24—The director of the Federal Center for Disease Control today defended the Government's investigation of a mysterious disease in Pennsylvania, while acknowledging flaws in the nation's capacity to deal with illnesses caused by toxic chemicals.

Dr. David J. Sencer told a Congressional subcommittee that the Pennsylvania outbreak had underscored a need for better procedures to collect tissue specimens in cases of unknown illness and for better coordination between the Government laboratories that specialize in toxicology.

"Each toxic substance has its own particular expert and I think we really need to catalogue the various capabilties that we have scattered in a wide variety of agencies," Dr. Sencer testified.

"We don't have any central focus of investigation as to where that exists, and I think this investigation points up the need for us to develop such a catalogue so we know who can be called upon for specific help on problems as they arise."

Two-Day Hearings Finished

Dr. Sencer testified before the consumer protection subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which completed two days of hearings on the unidentified illness that struck an American Legion convention in Philadelphia last July.

The disease, characterized by high fevers and severe lung congestion, killed 29 persons and made 151 more seriously ill. But the Center for Disease Control has been unable to identify the cause, despite what it describes as the most extensive epidemiological investigation in its history.

In a closing statement, Representative John M. Murphy, Democrat of Staten Island and chairman of the subcommittee, criticized the investigation for "poor communications, an initial misdirection of resources almost bordering on tunnel vision toward swine flu, and a decided lack of organization."

According to various witnesses, much of the blood and other tissue material collected from victims of the disease was unsuitable for toxicologic tests because of apparent contamination.

In the early hours after the epidemic was discovered, scientists concentrated on the search for an infectious agent and did not gather the blood and urine specimens most likely to contain evidence of a toxic cause, the critics charged.

New Guidelines Being Prepared

Dr. Sencer said that his center was developing new guidelines to insure that collected tissue samples were useful for testing toxic chemicals as well as infectious diseases.

But he denied that such shortcomings were responsible for the Government's lack of success in identifying the Pennsylvania disease.

A bigger problem, he said, was the nine day lag between the end of the legionnaires' convention and Aug. 2, when the existence of the epidemic was recognized.

Two-thirds of the deaths occurred on or before Aug. 2 and routine autopsy procedures made most of that tissue unsuitable for toxicological tests, Dr. Sencer said.

He added that tissue from these victims was more likely to have contained evidence of what killed them, because their bodies would have less time to rid themselves of the lethal agent.

The chemicals suggested by witnesses as possible causes of the Pennsylvania outbreak included nickel carbonyl, an odorless and colorless gas, and phosgene, a poisonous gas that killed thousands of soldiers in World War I.

The nickel carbonyl theory was challenged today by Dr. Jerrold L. Abraham, a pathologist at the University of California in San Diego, who used a technique called scanning electron microscopy to identify small metal particles found in the lungs of five victims of the unknown disease.

Dr. Abraham said he had found small particles of tin and-or zinc in tissue samples taken from five of seven disease victims. Lung tissue from two of five control cases also included such particles, Dr. Abraham said.

But Dr. Abraham said he had found no particles of nickel and only a few scattered particles of nickel alloys. "I think the data I have accumulated make nickel carbonyl poisoning unlikely," Dr. Abraham said. But he added that his results were not conclusive.

The phosgene theory is based on reported leaks of freon from the air-conditioning system in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, where the American Legion convention was held.

Dr. H. Norman Runsdorf, a traumatic surgeon from Brooklyn, testified that escaping freon could be converted to phosgene by heat from cigarettes, overheated machinery or other sources.

Federal authorities have called the symptoms of the unknown disease incompatible with phosgene poisoning.

Andre Malraux Is Buried Without Any Ritual, Conforming to His Wish

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Nov. 24 — André Malraux, who died yesterday of lung cancer at the age of 75, was buried today at the cemetery of Verrieres-le-Buisson, not far from Paris.

Conforming to the wish of the writer, Resistance hero and close aide to de Gaulle—he was a lifelong agnostic—there were no rites, no speeches and no sermon. Family and friends watched the oaken coffin being lowered, after which they filed past, each depositing a rose.

Present were Mr. Malraux's daughter, Florence, his only surviving child, and her husband, the film director Alain Resnais; the de Vilmorin family, with whom the writer was closely linked because of his long relationship with the late novelist Louise de Vilmorin, whose chateau at Verrières was his residence in recent years, and members of the de Gaulle family.

Also present were Mr. Malraux's publisher, Gaston Gallimard, the film director René Clair, former Ambassador Hervé Alphand and the State Secretary for Culture, Françoise Girouc.

The Government plans an official ceremony of homage, details of which have not yet been made public.

COUNTESS M. K. TOLSTOY, AMERICAN IN PARIS, 92

Writer Who Nursed in 2 Wars Was Widow of Leo Tolstoy's Nephew

Countess Mary Koutouzow Tolstoy, a leading figure in the American colony in Paris for more than half a century, died in Paris last Sunday at the age of 92, according to news received here by United Press International.

The former Mary Frothingham of New York, Countess Tolstoy was an author and artist and was director of couture houses in Paris. She remained in France, nursing in hospitals, in both world wars and worked with the French Resistance in World War II. She received the Croix de Guerre and the Medal of Verdun in 1917 and the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor for heroism in 1963.

The daughter of Charles Frederick and Mary Frothingham, who were prominent in New York society, she was a graduate of Barnard College in the class of 1904. Her marriage in Paris in 1910 to Count Alexander Tolstoy, a nephew of Leo Tolstoy—whose daughter, Countess Alexandra, lives in Nyack—and a descendant of the Kutuzovs of Russian military fame, was one of the glamorous alliances of a period that saw unions between American women and scions of European aristocracy. Count Tolstoy died in 1914 and his widow never remarried.

After World War I Countess Tolstoy joined the house of Germaine Lecomte and remained in the couture field until her retirement from Molyneux at the age of 83 in 1967. During this period Countes Tolstoy's home on the Avenue du Président Wilson was a meeting place for American and French writers and artists and the White Russian émigré colony.

Countess Tolstoy was a facile writer and an artist who specialized in etchings. Among her published books were "As the Old Order Was Changing," "The Right Age," "The Rewarding Years" and "Charlemagne to Dior," a history of French fashion published in 1963. She also translated into English Leo Tolstoy's "The Law of Love and the Law of Violence" for publication in the United States in 1953. Her etchings were last exhibited at the Paris Spring Salon in 1949.

A member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, she was regent of the Rochambeau Chapter, France, from 1955 to 1959.

PIETRO VALDONI

ROME, Nov. 23 (AP)—Prof. Pietro Valdoni, who headed the surgical team that removed Pope Paul VI's prostate gland in 1967, died at his home in Rome early today. He was 76 years old.

The cause of death was not immediately known.

Born in Trieste, Professor Valdoni was considered the founder of modern Italian surgery and the nation's top-ranking surgeon. Although he specialized in heart operations, he attended Pope John XXIII during his last illness with cancer, operated on the Communist leader Palmiro Togliatti after an attempt on his life in 1948 and treated many other leading Italians for a variety of ailments.

He is survived by his second wife and five children by his first marriage. His first wife died in 1963.

rings, ignored the bird and held forth about how television messed up show business. The Inkspots, with only the slightest prompting, struck up a chorus of "If I Didn't Care," with impromptu backup by the Harmonica Rascals.

The show, "Roy Radin's Vaudeville '76," has come through three months of one-night stands—with a couple of months still to go—playing halls and civic auditoriums in an effort to bring back vaudeville to small-town America.

"We've been playing to full houses in every town," said Joe Bohener, leader of the Inkspots, whose bass voice has been one of their trademarks for 39 years.

The still rubbery-faced Mr. Berle, the master of ceremonies, clowned for the news cameras with the same kind of energy he displayed on television's Texaco Star Theater.

"Let's face it, I'm a ham," he replied to a question about why he, a reported millionaire, would go through a grueling, whistlestop tour. "How much golf can I play, how much tennis can I play, how much sex can I have?" he asked. "I can't stay away from an audience more than two weeks."

In Plains, Ga., Mary Hoyt, press secretary to Rosalynn Carter, let it be known that the wife of the President-elect was cooking today's dinner for nearly a dozen members of their family. The traditional menu will include a couple of particular Southern favorites: cornbread dressing for the turkey and an "ambrosia" dessert of citrus fruits topped with coconut.

Besides the typical gatherings here around a family-sized turkey, there were many arrangements to share whatever bounty was available with the old, the poor and the lonely.

At Harlem's Colonial Park Community Center, 300 West 147th Street, crepe-paper decorations and savory odors from home-cooked turkeys will greet more than 150 neighborhood residents, most of them elderly. At least 10 of them live in buildings abandoned by their landlords.

'Shunned and Buried Alive'

"We wish to see the people out of these buildings," said the center's executive director, Roscoe Bradley, charging yesterday that these "old folks" were being "shunned and buried alive by a non-caring, slow, bureaucratic society."

Another cold day-hot turkey event will gather 200 persons, mostly from the Upper West Side, from Project Pilot senior-citizen centers into Trinity School, 136 West 91st Street. Nearly 30 boys and girls from its high school are helping to prepare the meal and others will provide the entertainment, while 20 fifth- and sixth-grade boys will wait on tables.

The Department of Labor said a New York family of four could dine at home on Turkey for $7.27, 26 cents more than last year. The Waldorf-Astoria Hotel suggested a dinner at $16.50 per person ($8 for a child's portion).

Amid the day's feasting, Rabbi Meir Kahane, founder of the Jewish Defense League, plans to fast all day—surrounded by Thanksgiving decorations arranged by his supporters—at the front door of the National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive. His purpose, he said, is to call on "Christian America" to support the "total defeat of the enemies" of Israel and the Jewish people.

ERNEST L. MOLLOY, 70, FORMER MACY CHIEF

Ernest L. Molloy

Ernest L. Molloy, former director and chief executive officer of R. H. Macy & Co. Inc., died Tuesday in San Francisco after a brief illness. He was 70 years old and lived in Incline Village, Nev.

Mr. Molloy spent his entire business career with Macy's. Upon his graduation from Harvard University in 1929, he joined the company's New York executive training squad.

Rising through the ranks, he became vice president and store superintendent in 1943.

In September 1945, when Macy's began operations in San Francisco, Mr. Molloy served as vice president and director there. He later was named executive vice president and in 1952 he was appointed to head the California division of the department-store chain.

In 1961 Mr. Molloy was named a director of the parent Macy Corporation. He became president of R. H. Macy & Co. Inc. in 1966, and in 1968 was named chief executive officer.

He retired on Aug. 1, 1971, but continued as a consultant to the company, one of the nation's largest and oldest department-store chains, whose main store is at Herald Square in New York City.

In 1971 he was elected to the board of directors of W. R. Grace & Co., a diversified international corporation, and held that post until 1975.

After Mr. Molloy retired from Macy's, he said he enjoyed trips East from his home in Incline Village near Lake Tahoe for business meetings and reunions with old friends. He had spent 42 years with the Macy organization, he said, and was enjoying his new mode of life.

"There comes a time," he recalled, "when you are not as ready to work as hard as you used to."

He told an interviewer at that time that he played golf three times a week, swam daily and worked in his garden often. He said that when snows came to Nevada, he went to Florida.

The three were headed home down the Beaver River when their boat sank, dumping the three and all their food and gear into the icy waters.

Having managed to swim to a clump of land jutting out of the river, Nest Island, the three tied together a driftwood raft with their shoelaces to carry John across the river to seek help.

Wearily awaiting his return, Robert Purvine and James Locks spent the night on the island huddled under some small trees, without sleeping bags and unable to make a fire.

Tuesday morning, in 18-degree temperatures, the two built another raft out of the same materials and Robert Purvine set out for help. He told state troopers that when he reached the far bank, he found his brother's footsteps and followed them to a site seven and a half miles away, near Beaver Dam. There he found his brother, frozen to death in a spillway. The troopers say Robert broke into the dam control house and called for aid. State troopers and firemen returned to the island to rescue Mr. Locks.

Both survivors were briefly hospitalized for frostbite and shock.

New Poles for L. I. Roads

The 1,700 wooden light poles along 78 miles of Long Island parkways will be removed over the next three years as an economy measure, the State Transportation Department says. The state parkways adorned by the wooden poles are the Northern and Southern State, Sagtikos, Sunken Meadow, Wantagh and Robert Moses. Aluminum poles will be installed along heavily traveled parts and major intersections of the parkways, but 30 miles of roadway will be outfitted with roadside reflectors instead of lights, the department said.

Sludge Hearing Set

A New York-New Jersey joint legislative committee will hear testimony from Federal, state and regional experts on Dec. 7 to find ways to speed the closing of the Atlantic Ocean as a dumping ground for raw sewage and sludge. Committee members are concerned over the continuing dumping in an area about midway between Long Island and Sandy Hook that has become known as a "dead sea."

The dumping has been going on since 1924, according to Dr. Anthony M. Villane Jr., a New Jersey Assemblyman, and Federal environmental authorities have said it must end by 1981. Dr. Villane called the dumping "a menace to both states" and said the aim of the hearings was to "push up the closing of this dumping ground a little bit sooner."

Unemployment Up a Bit

Unemployment in New Jersey rose slightly last month to 11.4 percent, continuing the gloomy labor picture of the fall, analysts with the state's Labor and Industry Department said.

The rise, a tenth of a percentage point, represented an increase of 5,400 jobless workers to a total estimated at 3,822,900, with the nonfarm work force slipping to 2,657,800.

Much of the October increase in the jobless was attributed to the Ford Motor Company and United Parcel Service strikes, which hurt business generally. The unemployment rate in October 1975 was two points higher, at 13.4 percent.

Search Pressed in Slaying

Detectives pressed their search for information that could lead them to the slayer of an elderly couple found strangled Monday in their apartment in a luxury building at 201 East 66th Street. They did not report progress. Experts checked for fingerprints and other clues at the apartment in which 84-year-old Lawrence I. Gerber and his wife, Frances, 72, were murdered. In addition, more tenants were questioned.

Milk Minimum Drops

The Division of Dairy Industry said in Trenton that the minimum retail price for milk in New Jersey would drop one-half cent a quart next Wednesday. This means that the lowest price at which milk may be sold in New Jersey will be 38½ cents a quart, 72 cents a half-gallon and $1.38 a gallon. Woodson W. Moffett Jr., director of the division, said that those figures were the same which prevailed during July and August of this year, and that they were below the price for December of 1975.

THREE PLEAD GUILTY IN MURDER-FOR-HIRE

Two Others Are Indicted in Case in Which Councilman Wright's Brother Was the Victim

By MAX H. SEIGEL

Three men pleaded guilty yesterday to killing Thomas Wright, a brother of City Councilman Samuel D. Wright, in a murder-for-hire plot allegedly hatched by Mr. Wright's partner in a Brooklyn check-cashing business.

The murder took place on Nov. 17, 1975, a little more than three months after the partner, Harold Brown, and Mr. Wright signed an agreement providing that if one of them died, the other would become sole owner of the business. Officials of the office of District Attorney Eugene Gold of Brooklyn estimated that the business had a value of about $30,000.

The three men who entered pleas of guilty to murder in the second degree yesterday before Justice Hyman Barshay in State Supreme Court in Brooklyn were Eric Teen, 25 years old, of 420 East 21st Street; Joseph Medina, 26, of 8751 16th Street, all in Brooklyn. Sentencing for the three has been scheduled for Jan. 5, and all face 25 years to life in prison.

Two other men indicted in connection with the murder face trial in January. They are Mr. Brown, 53, of 2552 East 7th Street, and Vito Finetti, 54, of 2150 Royce Street.

Investigators' Account

According to investigators for Mr. Gold's office, Mr. Brown offered Mr. Finetti $8,000 to have his partner in B and W Check Cashing Inc. of 308 Utica Avenue, killed. Mr. Finetti, in turn, was said to have hired the three men who pleaded guilty yesterday to carry out the murder.

On Nov. 17, 1975, one of the three was said to have lured Mr. Wright to an apartment building at 401 East 23d Street, presumably to look at some furniture. When they entered the hallway, the other two men who had been hiding there leaped out, according to Mr. Gold's office. Mr. Wright was shot three times, once with his own service revolver. Mr. Wright carried the weapon as a court officer in Supreme Court in Brooklyn.

He also was said by the District Attorney to have been stabbed with an ice pick and strangled. His body then was taken to the Flatlands section of Brooklyn and dumped behind some hedges in a lot at the corner of East 34th Street and Avenue K, the prosecutor's office said.

When authorities found the body, the pockets in Mr. Wright's clothes had been turned inside out and emptied, leading to the belief that robbery may have been the motive.

Detectives Harvey Charyn and Ronald Tappen of the 12th Homicide Zone, working with investigators for the District Attorney, were able to arrest two of the five men less than two weeks after the murder occurred. Two others were taken into custody shortly afterward. And the fifth, Mr. Pastore, surrendered to a television station in Santa Monica, Calif. last Jan. 22.

Reward Is Unclaimed

Councilman Wright, who offered a reward of $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the killer of his brother, said yesterday, "No one has claimed the reward so far, but the offer still stands and I'm ready to pay."

The City Councilman, who had sought unsuccessfully to win the seat of Representative Shirley Chisholm, expressed gratification at the guilty pleas.

"I think that the wheels of justice, though they may turn slowly, are working," he said.

Thomas was the second brother of the Councilman to be killed within a two-year period. A younger brother, Police Officer Irving E. Wright, 34, was shot to death on March 5, 1973, by two fellow officers who had mistaken him for a holdup man as he was chasing a robber from an all-night grocery store in Harlem. Patrolman Wright had moonlighted as a clerk at the store.

Greenwich Teachers Settle Strike For 6.8% Raise and a 3-Year Pact

Special to The New York Times

GREENWICH, Nov. 24—Details of a tentative agreement between Greenwich's 700 teachers and the school system were disclosed today.

The settlement, reached last night by negotiators and approved at a 6 A.M. meeting of the union members, calls for a three-year contract that will provide raises of 6.8 percent in the first year, 6 percent in the second and 5.75 percent in the third.

The raises are higher than the board wanted to pay and the contract is longer than the teachers wanted.

Alan Frey, president of the Greenwich Education Association, is guarded about the future. "It will depend on what happens with the cost of living and how other towns around us fare," he said. "Right now I'm going to catch up on my laundry and see my parents."

The strike, led by the energetic, 29-year-old Mr. Frey, was the first teachers' strike in Greenwich's history.

"We're united now," said Paul Cahill, a high school teacher of English, as he sipped coffee with his colleagues in the teachers' lounge at 7:30 A.M. "It's a compromise, but it was give and take and that's what we were looking for."

The teachers began filing out to their classrooms at 7:30 A.M.

The Board of Education will pay 100 percent of medical insurance costs and will increase the $750 fee for teaching 25 days of summer school to $1,000. It will also continue to pay accumulated sick leave on retirement, often amounting to one-third of a year's pay.

The first two steps of the salary scale have been eliminated, creating a $1,000 advantage for the beginning teacher. Those with a bachelor's degree will earn $10,500 to start; a master's brings $11,600.

Some of the settlement terms, particularly salaries, exceed the provisions of a state arbitration award made last week and rejected by both sides. Final figures have yet to be worked out, along with other details, at a meeting scheduled for Saturday. Meanwhile, no contract has been signed.

As the list of negotiated items was read off this morning by Dr. Rene Gimbrere, vice chairman of the Board of Education, it became clear that the only thing the board retained was its control over class size within the current framework of a 25-pupil average.

The settlement was reached Tuesday night after a seven-hour session in chambers with Judge T. Clark Hull in Superior Court, who Mr. Gimbrere said "came down hard on both sides."

Mr. Frey called Judge Hull a "highly effective mediator."

A threat of heavy fines against the teachers and an injunction handed to the board earlier in the day brought about the mediation.

Although the strike was the first in Greenwich, it was not unexpected. The school superintendent, Dr. Ernest B. Fleishman, on the job only since July, said, "I'd heard rumblings before I came."

Concern over divisiveness and polarization in this normally close-knit, orderly community was high. "Had it gone on for an extensive time, involving fines and jailings, the effect would have been devastating," said Beverly Jomo, chairman of the school board.

Students picketed the Board of Education last week in an effort to avert a walkout. "We wanted them to settle it among themselves," said Dee Eldering, a senior, in the high school student center this morning.

Another student, Torri Hite, was not as sympathetic. "I think they were unreasonable," she said. "They just want to live in town, and it's too expensive. Lots of people don't live where they work. The teachers work in the best school system in the country . . . that should be enough."

Alleged Warning of Danger Before Chicle Plant Blast Is Being Checked

A deputy chief fire marshal said last night that the Fire Department had begun to investigate a report that the American Chicle Company in Long Island City, Queens had been warned in 1975 that its continued use of volatile chemical dust as a gum-machine lubricant could cause an explosion.

The warning to be investigated, John S. Barracato said, was reported to have been issued by Richard J. Murphy, a former company inspector.

Fire Commissioner John T. O'Hagan said on Tuesday that the explosion and fatal fire at the plant last Sunday was probably caused when sparks from a malfunctioning machine ignited dust in the air from magnesium stearate, the chemical described in the reported warning by Mr. Murphy.

Mr. Murphy, who left work at the gum factory on May 23, 1975, is now working for a degree in laboratory technology at La Guardia Community College.

The American Chicle Company, meanwhile, is continuing to pay its 1,600 employees, despite the plant's closing since Sunday.

The five-story building, at 30-30 Thomson Avenue, can "begin opening up the early part of next week" if investigators allow it, company spokesmen said yesterday. Damage had been mainly on the fourth floor, where Freshen-Up gum was being made.

The Fire Department said the reopening could be anywhere from "a few days to a few weeks" away, pending studies of ways to avert any similar disaster. The blast, at 2:42 A.M., fatally injured one man and sent 47 other workers to hospitals.

American Chicle, a division of the Warner-Lambert Company, has a payroll of $20 million a year in Long Island City, with added benefits of 40 percent for hourly workers and 25 percent for salaried employees, company spokesmen said.

Its 1,600 employees make it one of the largest manufacturing companies in Queens, along with the Ideal Toy Corporation of Hollis, the Eagle Electric Manufacturing Company of Long Island City and the Bulova Watch Company of Jackson Heights, according to James J. Thornton, executive vice president of the Queens Chamber of Commerce.

The block-square building was erected in 1919 and 1920 for the American Chicle Company, which had been formed in 1899 out of Adams & Sons, the pioneer chicle chewing-gum maker, and other concerns. American Chicle merged with Warner-Lambert in 1962.

The company traces its history back to Thomas Adams, a New York photographer, who took in an old friend, General Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, as a boarder in Staten Island after he was deposed as President of Mexico. The general imported a ton of chicle, derived from Mexican evergreen sapodilla trees, to try to blend with rubber to make carriage tires.

Mr. Adams and his four sons failed in that effort, but then the father got a new idea when he saw a girl in a drugstore buy a penny's worth of paraffin for chewing. He made up chicle into sticks and, following a sales trip by Thomas Adams Jr. to the West, the new product, patented in 1872, caught on.

The Long Island City plant, the successor to earlier factories in Jersey City and Brooklyn, has been making Dentyne, Chiclets, Clorets, Adams Sour Gums, Freshen-Up and Trident chewing gum as well as mints.

The Fire Department said yesterday that its inspections indicated there had been only minor violations on the premises, such as one exit not properly lighted, but no violations directly connected with the explosion.

Commissioner O'Hagan is studying possible new regulations that might require stopping a manufacturing process entirely while machinery is being repaired.

Second Man Sentenced in Slaying Of Six in Bakery in New Britain

HARTFORD, Nov. 24 (UPI)—One of the two men convicted in the 1974 shooting deaths of six persons in a New Britain, Conn., bakery was sentenced today to 25 years to life.

The defendant, Gary Schrager, 33 years old, pleaded guilty to four counts of murder. Superior Court Judge Edward Hamill said in passing sentence that Mr. Schrager had been "involved in the execution of six innocent people."

Mr. Schrager at first testified he did not participate in the killings at the Donna Lee bakery, then changed his plea to guilty. Ronald Piskorski, a New Britain furniture mover, was tried separately and sentenced to six consecutive life terms. He is currently confined to the state prison at Somers.

Bronfman Case Prosecutor Rips Into Lynch's Story

By M. A. FARBER
Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 24—With a mixture of sarcasm, irony and derision, the prosecution attempted today to undermine Mel Patrick Lynch's testimony that he did not kidnap Samuel Bronfman 2d but was engaged with the alleged victim in an extortion plot against young Bronfman's father, Edgar.

Geoffrey K. Orlando, an assistant Westchester district atorney who had rarely raised his voice before the cross-examination of Mr. Lynch began yesterday, paced back and forth in the narrow strip of beige carpet between the jury and the witness, alternately mocking and shouting at the 38-year-old fireman on the stand. But only rarely did Mr. Lynch appear shaken as he repeatedly testified that he was acting under orders from Samuel Bronfman in the "phony abduction."

"Isn't it a fact . . .'" Mr. Orlando would begin question after question designed to demonstrate the implausible or inconsistent nature of some of Mr. Lynch's earlier testimony. Yet for each question but one, the witness had a ready answer.

Mr. Lynch appeared momentarily stymied when Mr. Orlando asked him why he said on Monday that he had had to whisper on one occasion during the alleged kidnapping to his co-defendant, Dominic P. Byrne, if the abduction actually was a hoax "mastermined" by Mr. Bronfman—the very person whom Mr. Lynch wanted out of earshot.

The witness, whose face took on a blank expression, paused for about five seconds. "Can't you answer?" Mr. Orlando asked.

At that point defense lawyers objected that the prosecutor had not given Mr. Lynch sufficient time to respond. The fireman finally replied that he had whispered to Mr. Byrne for the sake of appearances because Mr. Byrne was unaware at that time that the kidnapping was being faked.

The matter was then dropped, but not before Judge George Beisheim Jr. admonished Mr. Lynch's lawyer, Walter J. Higgins Jr., for advising his client that Mr. Orlando had a transcript of Monday's proceeding on the lecturn.

"That's highly improper," the judge said, glaring at Mr. Higgins.

Mr. Lynch maintains that he reluctantly took part in a "phony abduction" of the 21-year-old heir to the Seagram liquor fortune because young Bronfman had threatened to expose him to the Fire Department as a homosexual if he refused. He says that he had had homosexual relations with Mr. Bronfman for a year prior to the events in August 1975.

Mr. Bronfman denies that he knew Mr. Lynch before he was kidnapped, and says that he never engaged in homosexual activities. Mr. Byrne contends that he was "duped" by Mr. Lynch into what seemed to be a real abduction and that he then tried to extricate himself and Mr. Bronfman.

Earlier today Mr. Orlando attempted to establish that Mr. Lynch had sent the ransom note in the case to Edgar Bronfman at his former—rather than his current—address because he had seen the address, 740 Park Avenue, in a newspaper article on Nov. 14, 1974, the article related to Mr. Bronfman's annulment suit against Lady Caroline Townshend.

Samuel Bronfman would have known better than to use an old address, Mr. Orlando implied.

But Mr. Lynch, who blushed as Mr. Orlando read to the jury the article detailing the elder Bronfman's sexual—or lack of sexual—relations with his second wife, asserted that Samuel Bronfman had told him to use the Park Avenue address because it would "throw off anyone" who suspected the apparent victim of pulling a hoax.

Although the elder Bronfman, who is chairman of Seagram Distillers, was living in August 1975 at 960 Fifth Avenue, he still maintained a penthouse apartment at 740 Park Avenue, and the ransom letter was forwarded to him.

Another address of Edgar Bronfman also figured in today's testimony. Mr. Orlando noted that Mr. Lynch had told law-enforcement authorities after his arrest that he had looked up Mr. Bronfman in "Who's Who in America" several years ago and had found his home address listed as 60 Lincoln Avenue, Port Chester, N.Y.

Although Mr. Lynch now says that he never researched Mr. Bronfman's background or address, but relied on what Samuel Bronfman "told me," Mr. Orlando pointed out that the correct Bronfman address in Westchester County was Purchase, not Port Chester, as stated in Who's Who. Again, he implied, young Bronfm nawould have known better.

Mr. Orlando, reading from a book published in 1973 on the kidnapping of Barbara Jane Mackle in Florida, emphasized the many similarities in language between the ransom note in the Bronfman case and the ransom note in the Mackle case as printed in the book, "Eighty-three Hours Till Dawn."

"Isn't it a fact that you read that book and then wrote the ransom note in this case?" Mr. Orlando asked Mr. Lynch.

"I haven't denied that," the witness replied. But he added that young Bronfman had also read the book and had told him to model the ransom note in this case after the Mackle one.

Harassment on Job Ruled Cause to Quit

TRENTON, Nov. 24 (AP)—An employee who is shunned by her coworkers has good cause to leave her job and may collect unemployment, according to a ruling of the Appellate Division of the Superior Court.

The court ruled yesterday that Dorothy Stumper, who had been employed as a keypunch operator for Nations Community Bank in Maywood, had a valid reason for leaving her job.

Miss Stumper left her job in August 1975, the court said, because of harassment and ostracism by fellow employees. Her request for unemployment had been turned down by a hearing officer because, in the hearing officer's opinion, she had quit her job without good cause.

Jury Told Mrs. Friedgood Spok On Phone 8 Hours After 'De

Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L. I., Nov. 24—A key defense witness in the murder trial of Dr. Charles E. Friedgood testified today that she had spoken to Sophie Friedgood on the telephone eight hours after the prosecution contends that the woman had been killed by her husband.

Lillian Ruiz, a medical assistant at a Brooklyn health center where Dr. Friedgood performed surgery, told the Nassau County Court jury that she had spoken to Mrs. Friedgood about 9:30 A.M. on June 18, 1975, at the couple's Kensington home.

Based on medical testimony, the prosecution has contended that Mrs. Friedgood died between midnight and 2 A.M. on that morning as a result of a fatal injection of Demerol, a pain killer. They said that an autopsy had disclosed that she could not have been alive beyond 2 A.M. because much of the contents of her stomach were undigested.

In questioning Mrs. Ruiz, John J. Sutter, the defense attorney, asked:

"Did you make a call to Dr. Friedgood's residence on June 18, 1975?"

"I spoke to Mrs. Friedgood on the telephone on Wednesday, June 18, at 9:30—quarter to 10—in the morning," Mrs. Ruiz replied in a strong voice.

Mrs. Ruiz testified that she had met Mrs. Friedgood many times prior to June 18 and recognized her voice.

The foundation for today's testimony was established last week when the housemaid testified that she h Friedgood walking overhead in room on the morning of June eight hours after the prosecu tends that Sophie Friedgood dered.

Under cross-examination by Scaring, the prosecutor, Mrs. mitted that after hearing Friedgood's being charged with murder and reading about it newspaper, she had failed to the police or to the District office.

Mrs. Ruiz initially said tod first disclosed the telephone c to Frank Steiner, an invest Saturday. Later she said sh with Mr. Sutter last night mention the alleged telephon tion with Mrs. Friedgood to ever, under further cross-e the witness changed her tes said that she had discussed th call with the defense attorne

ial to The New York Times

N, N.J., Nov. 24—A Passaic rt judge explained on the in the triplemurder retrial lurricane) Carter and John f the factors that went into g of Alfred P. Bello a key witness, in their trial and in der trial nine years ago.

William J. Marchese, ex- he sentenced Mr. Bello to in the County Jail on a charge of entry with intent to steal in June 1974. Mr. Bello had pleaded guilty to the charge on a plea that involved the dropping of a second lesser charge of petit larceny. The more serious charge carried a maximum sentence of up to seven years.

On the stand today, Judge Marchese recalled that a day or so before he was scheduled to sentence Mr. Bello, he received a visit for a county detective, Lieut. Vincent J. DeSimone Jr., who told him Mr. Bello had been a key witness in the Carter-Artis case. The judge recalled that the lieutenant said that in the event I was considering a State Prison sentence, he and the other officers were concerned about the health and safety of Mr. Bello."

He said he understood their concern to stem from the fact that Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis were then serving life sentences for the triple murders, having been convicted with the help of Mr. Bello's testimony.

"I asked if he would protect Mr. Bello in County Jail, where I intended to send him," the judge said, "and he said that would be no problem."

The judge explained that any sentence of one year or longer automatically requires incarceration in State Prison instead of a county jail.

Three months after sentencing, Mr. Bello's case came before Judge Marchese again, he said, when Mr. Bello filed a motion for a reduction of his sentence, which the judge denied. He explained that Mr. Bello "accused jail guards of assaulting him, accused other inmates of assaulting him, and accused the dentist of breaking his jaw while extracting a tooth." Judge Marchese had him transferred to the Bergen County Jail.

Under cross-examination by defense attorneys, the judge was asked whether Lieutenant DeSimone had not said that "he was fearful of Mr. Bello's safety were he to be incarcerated," words used by the judge in the letter he wrote last month to defense and prosecution lawyers in the murde rtrial of Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis. Judge Marchese was, at that time, scheduled to hear the Carter-Artis case, but disqualified himself after the defense objected to his prior involvement with two key prosecution witnesses —Mr. Bello and Lieutenant DeSimone.

Crucial Difference

The defense tried to show that there was a crucial difference in the wording of Lieutenant DeSimone's request, in that, as the judge described it in his letter, it would have been a plea not to incarcerate Mr. Bello at all, anywhere. The judge testified today that he had kept no notes of his conversation with Lieutenant DeSimone two years ago and could not recall the exact language that was used.

A second judge, Joseph M. Harrison, testified as to how he was appointed in 1966 when he was still a lawyer by the court to represent Mr. Bello, who had been asked to testify at a grand jury that was considering the triple-murder case. He said he sought immunity from prosecution on crimes that Mr. Bello would have had to admit committing on the night of the murders. When a promise of immunity was denied, he said, he advised Mr. Bello not to testify. Mr. Bello did not testify, and was never charged with the attempted burglary and theft he has since admitted.

In other testimony today, records of visits by certain persons to Mr. Bello, while he was in the Passaic and Bergen County Jails in 1973 and 1974, were provided for the court. Those people, including Selwyn Raab, a reporter for The New York Times, have been accused by Mr. Bello of having offered him bribes or inducements to recant his testimony.

Employees of th two jails provided dates and times of the visits with Mr. Bello and, in the case of Mr. Raab, told of two occasions on which the reporter left $10 for Mr. Bello. Mr. Raab has said he left the money so Mr. Bello could purchase cigarettes and other items at the prison canteen.

Under cross-examination by Lewis Steel, the atorney for Mr. Artis, it was indicated that there was a third occasion on which Mr. Raab left $10 for Mr. Bello.

"As long as he's being accused of bribery," mr. Steel said of Mr. Raab, "you might as wll get him up there for the full $30."

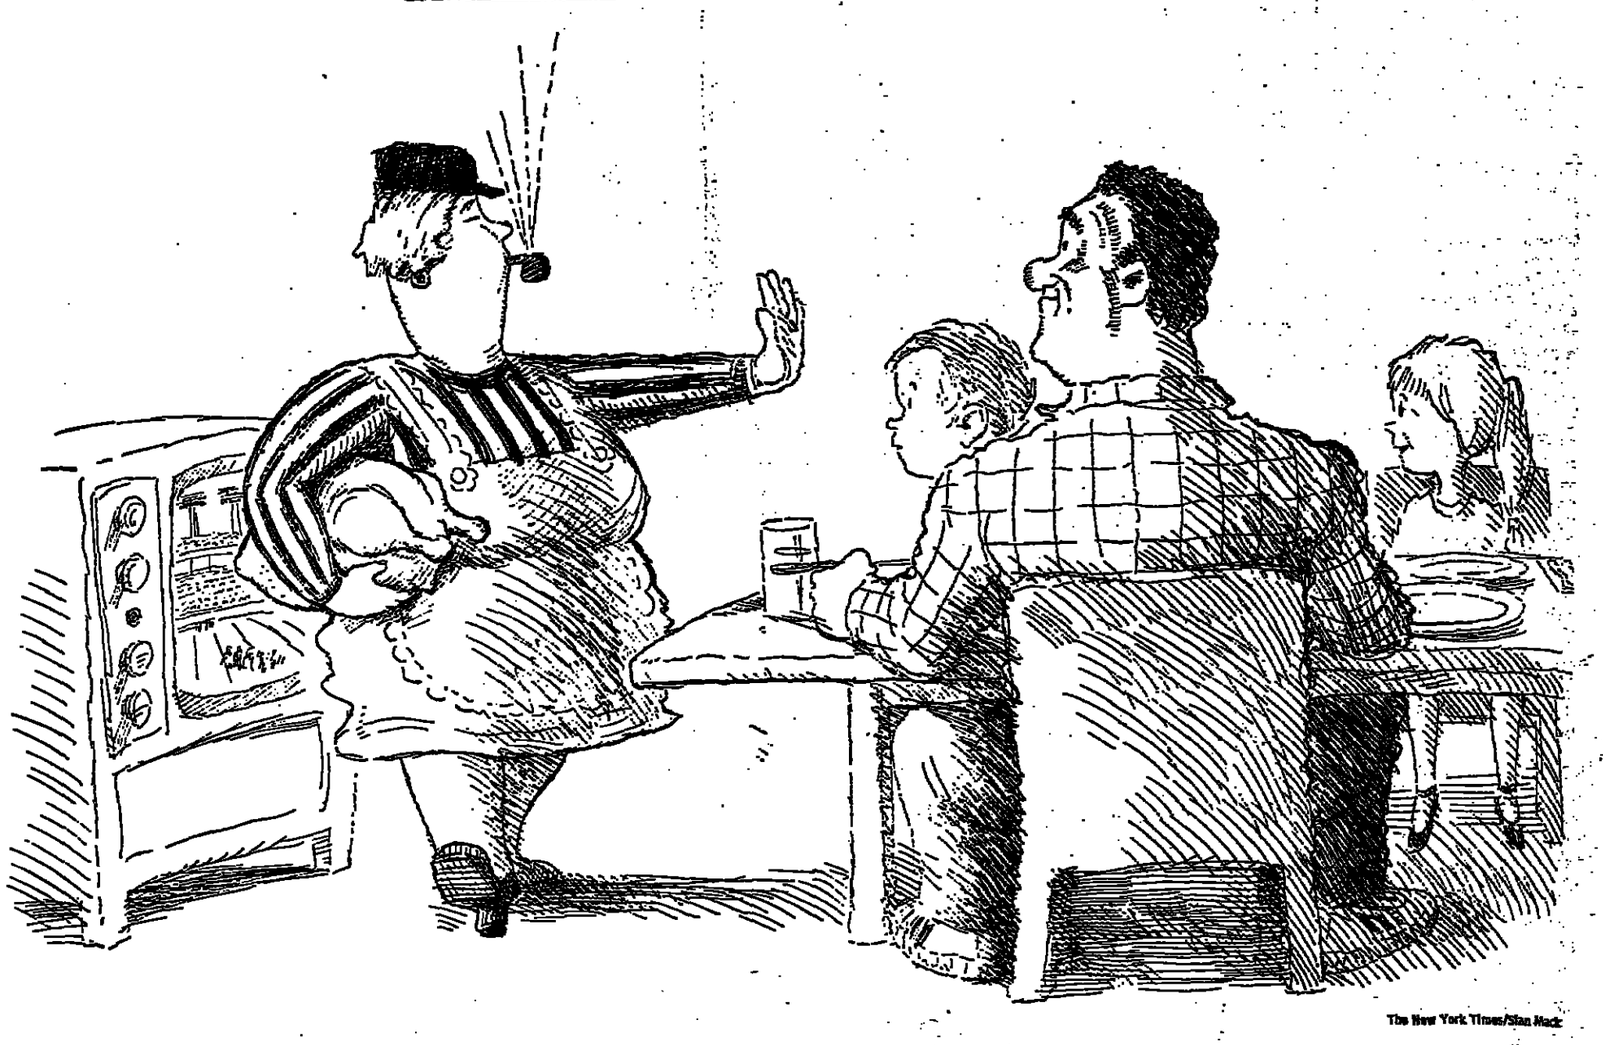
What? Yams? No Mallows? Eschew Them Or Get the Bird At Half-Time



The New York Times/Stan Hack

By GEORGIA DULLEA

This may be a Thanksgiving in which fewer Americans partake of sweet potato casseroles with marshmallows on top, a dish that has risen to ritual food status over the years and somehow managed to stick there.

Serious cooks denounce it, periodically. Children love it, but who asked them?

Anyway a number of women have warned their families to expect something else in the way of sweet potatoes this year. For Shirley Swartwout of Staten Island, that something will be plain roasted yams, which she plans to serve with butter—and some apprehension—to her husband, William, a New York City police officer, and their four children.

"I hope they won't miss the marshmallows and feel cheated," Mrs. Swartwout said.

No one will riot over marshmallows today. And if the cranberries should come from a can, the stuffing from a bag, no one will fuss. Reasonable people have long since come to expect, if not welcome, a relaxing of the Thanksgiving rituals. As long as someone remembers to pull the turkey out of the freezer and someone remembers to push it in the oven, everyone else will happily wing it.

Even grandmothers feel this way. The line of cars going over the river and down the parkway to grandmother's house is not nearly as long these days. Some grandmothers have sold their houses and taken efficiency apartments. Some grandmothers have taken jobs.

Elise Robinson is one of those grandmothers and she has decided to dine with friends at a Yonkers restaurant today rather than go to her son's home near Albany.

"I asked my daughter-in-law for a rain check this year," Mrs. Robinson said with a smile. "Thanksgiving is always such a madhouse up there. I'll go when I can enjoy the children."

It is a wise grandmother who eschews the Thanksgiving madhouse. More often than not, though, the house seems quieter, emptier than on Thanksgivings past. There are fewer small cousins underfoot, for one thing, fewer cooks bumping hips in the kitchen, fewer relatives quarreling in the living room.

And what is there to quarrel about, really? Shall we eat before or after the football game? Why not turn the set around to face the turkey?

To some cooks, these questions are academic. As Lee Kovach, a nurse who lives in Caldwell, N.J., with her husband and seven children, observed: "The football goes on all day. With luck, you get the bird on the table at half-time."

Mrs. Kovach did not sound bitter about this. Like some other women, she has developed an interest in Thanksgiving football after all these years. There is another woman, a photographer's wife with four teen-agers, who says she now serves the feast on Wednesday so she watch football on Thursday with the rest of the fa

If women are watching more football, it does not n sarily follow that men are basting more Butterba even carving them, for that matter. Which explains Rosemary Arktander will be "hacking away" in he Cliff, L.I., kitchen and hoping her tradition-minded er-in law won't notice.

And for every man like Richard Scoville, a Manh lawyer who talks of preparing an elegant five-c dinner topped off with homemade rhubarb tarts, are perhaps a dozen more like James Sullivan, a salesman, who "talks a good game," in the wor his wife, Marie.

"What do you mean?" he protested. "Don't I a baste the turkey?"

"Sure," she said, "every time you happen to into the kitchen for another beer."

Children on Runway, And Chaos Everywhere

The New York Times/Chester Higgins Jr.

By ANGELA TAYLOR

There were thumb-suckers and balkers, absolute hams who waved at the crowd and tried to get back on the runway yelling "Wanna do it again!" Three hundred parents, sisters and brothers, grandmothers and next-door neighbors, armed with Instamatics, jostled to get pictures of Lesie or Jonathan or Jennifer. Flashbulbs popped as fathers called out "Alexis, look over here!" Professional photographers hardly had a chance.

It was, everybody agreed, an absolute smasher of a fund-raising party. You'd have to be out of your mind to do it again, one of its harassed backers said, but it worked. It jammed the 498 West Broadway Fish Restaurant, and took in $1,500 for a nursery school called the Children's Energy Center on SoHo's Prince Street.

The whole thing began when Lulu Johnson, a bright-eyed 1½-year-old, joined the school. Lulu's mother is Betsey Johnson, who has been the enfant terrible of Seventh Avenue since she started designing 10 years ago at the age of 24. Betsey happens to be designing a children's line called Betsey Johnson's Kids. Lee Friedman, who manufactures the clothes and has two young daughters of his own, agreed to lend the spring and summer collection for a fashion show, and to pick up the check for the food.

There was no problem about models. Fifty-four children, mainly under five, were only too anxious to parade the clothes, and there was a guaranteed audience of adults to watch them. Plus mothers to act as dressers and even a professional makeup man to give them rosy cheeks and gooey, lipsticked mouths.

'For Kids to Wear'

And of course, there was Betsey herself, who was done up as the Tooth Fairy in a spikey crown, a pink outfit and outlandish high-heeled boots. She led off the show (on the restaurant's bar) leading Lulu in a Raggedy Ann outfit with bloomers. Lulu didn't much like the red yarn wig and gave it to a father who wore it for the rest of the evening.

Betsey Johnson says she designs children's clothes to have a good time and for "kids to wear and enjoy my stuff." And they do. She gives them what she calls "jock stuff": bright colored ponchos and jumpsuits and shorts and aprons. And T-shirts and track suits with huge stripes, with funny little 'elves' caps to go with them.

Then she switches into ladylike stuff. White eyelet dresses and pinafores run through with pink satin ribbon. Long "prairie" dresses with matching sunbonnets Baretopped "dance" dresses to wear sunbonnets. Baretopped "dance" dresses to wear right out of Edwardian portraits. Dresses with smocked bodices to reduce a grandmother to jelly. Wing-sleeved pinafores to make even a brat look angelic.

Like all proper fashion shows, the parade ended with a wedding scene. The bride was properly demure in white eyelet, but the bridegroom absolutely refused to carry her veil. He was too busy holding on his top hat.

What with breaking up fights, wiping his daughters' tears and explaining to parents that the clothes wouldn't be in the stores until February, Mr. Friedman also had his hands full.

"That's my sample line they're wearing," he moaned, as kids crawled around on the floor in their finery and tried to scramble back on the bar for encores. "I must be crazy."

A Touch of Make Belie To Keep the Hands Wa

When Pat Bond drops into Gino's for lunch on a chilly day wearing her fur or navy cloth coat and clutching her big teddy bear, people sit up and take notice all right. Not to worry though. It isn't a case of arrested development. This teddy isn't a toy, but a cozy fake fur muff with hidden zippered compartment for change and cosmetics, just one in a kooky line designed and produced by Miss Bond and Nolan Drummond.

Cat lovers will warm to a smug feline in brown velveteen or shaggy white fake fur; others prefer a green frog with capacious red-satin-lined mouth. And if animals don't appeal, carry the big apple in red velveteen with green satin leaf or red velveteen heart, edged with crisp white lace. For the festive season there's even a Christmas tree of crushed green velvet topped with a silver lamé star, a larger version of which is a muff in its own right.

Miss Bond, and Mr. Drummond, whose experience as a costume designer and upholsterer stands him in good stead, also provide a less flamboyant "evening line" of quilted velveteen muffs. There is the clutch muff, actually a clutch bag as well as a muff; the midnight muff, possibly the only bona fide muff of the lot, and the skyline muff, ornamented with the Empire State Building in satin appliqué. These can be ordered in a choice of 20 colors or combinations thereof.

The muffs, each equipped with an arm strap to free the hands, sell for $45 (the kooky ones) and $75 (the evening ones) at Henri Bendel, Serendipity 3, 225 East 60th Street, and Miss Bond's Card and Gift Corner at the Plaza Hotel.

ATTEND FUNERAL: John and Carolyn Kennedy, children of the late President, leaving church in Washington yesterday after attending funeral for their mother's stepfather, Hugh D. Auchincloss Sr. who died Saturday.

The photograph was seen by millions of people all over the world. It showed a grief-stricken teen-age girl, hands outstretched, kneeling over the body of a Kent State student shot by National Guard troops in 1970. The girl was Mary Vecchio, then a 14-year-old who had run away from home. The photograph led to her being returned home to the Miami area. This week in Miami she pleaded not guilty after her arrest on charges of prostitution, massaging without a license and lewd and lascivious behavior. In 1975 she was fined $50 after pleading no contest to a charge of offering to commit prostitution.

New York State Tax Load Found Highest in U.S. and Going Higher

A taxpayer research group has reported that combined state and local taxes in New York State are taking an increasing share of personal income, in addition to continuing the nation's highest tax load in dollars per resident.

From exacting 11 percent from individual income in 1965, the "tax bite over the last decade has become steadily bigger"—to nearly 17 percent in the latest available income data for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1974—according to Citizens Public Expenditure Survey Inc. of New York State.

The Albany watchdog group cited United States Commerce Department statistics in its report. They showed an average 1974-5 state-local tax burden of $1,008.79 for New York State residents, compared with a 1973-74 per-capita income of $5,705. Ten years earlier, the watchdog group said, the same taxes took $372.10 out of incomes of $3,162.

John F. Van Cott, chairman of the statewide organization, said that "the size of the tax bite nationally has increased much more slowly"—from about 10 to 12 percent. This, he contended, is "part of the reason for New York's deteriorating competitive position."

"People who do not live in New York," Mr. Van Cott said, "have more income left after taxes to buy the goods and services that must be bought to keep the economy strong."

Nevertheless a chart published by the group showed that the $56.50 increase in state-local taxes for each New York State resident from 1973-4 to 1974-5 had been exceeded by dollar increases in 18 other states.

California, with the second highest state-local tax load, averaging $889.71, had an increase of $127.46 in the same period. Alaska, third highest with $880.40 in per-capita taxes, had an increase of $269.37.

Three states had the uncommon experience of seeing the average tax burden decreased. Connecticut residents averaged $687.92 in state-local taxes in 1974-75, down 63 cents; Michigan's $656.55 tax was down $22.60, and Florida's $512.-89 fell $7.11.

'Soaring Expenditures'

In the tri-state New York City area, New Jersey residents averaged $714.07 in state-local taxes, for a $30.88 increase. The national tax burden averaged $665.60, up $47.21.

New York tops the states in "soaring expenditures," according to the research group. Within the last decade it said, Medicaid costs here increased 500 percent, education costs rose 118 percent per pupil, and debt tripled so that increased taxes were required to cover debt service.

To explain "New York's declining business climate and consequent languishing income," the study said, taxes have been "the single complaint given most often by businesses leaving the state."

Virgil Thomson Vigorous at 80

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Virgil Thomson is 80 years old today, but he does not seem unduly weighed down by age. "We live a long time in my family," the distinguished American composer and critic said cheerily the other day. "My sister's 91. She's in a nursing home now because she broke both legs. We do fall down."

Mr. Thomson went through a hospital stay himself this past summer, with a delicate spinal-disk operation to relieve pain in a leg. Now he reports he feels perfectly fine and, except for his hearing, he can not think of anything wrong with him at all.

Deafness for him involves both a weakening and, more unusually, a "falsification" of his hearing. "I've given up piano playing and conducting, because I can't hear balances any more. And I hear the wrong intervals. For instance, below violin G, I'm a half tone flat."

These complaints have not affected his spirits or his activities much. Mr. Thomson has been a lively force on the American musical scene for over 50 years—even when, as between 1925 and 1939, he was based primarily in Paris. In France, he was an intimate of Les Six, a group of Modernist French composers, and of Gertrude Stein, who wrote the texts for his two major operas, "Four Saints in Three Acts" and "The Mother of Us All," and for several smaller works.

Lively Spirits for 50 Years

Mr. Thomson pioneered the relation between serious composers and films with his scores in the 30's—especially "The Plow That Broke the Plains" and "The River"—and has written in a large variety of other musical forms. He has also been a leading American music critic. His principal forum was The New York Herald Tribune between 1940 and 1954, where his wit and clarity of style helped free American music from an undue subservience to Germanic musical and prosodic models.

Today he continues with his composing, if at not quite the same rate as before. "Falsified hearing doesn't interfere with composing," he says. "The memory of intervals, chords, melodic possibilities is what you work with, the same way you use language when you're writing a letter."

Mr. Thomson is superstitiously hesitant about discussing music before it's finished, but it's a superstition easily overcome. "I'm reluctant to talk about music in progress—it brings bad luck. After you get to the middle of something, it's all right, but up to that point you don't really believe in it. Right now I'm laying out a choral work of some length on a text by Plutarch, of all things."

The New York Times

Virgil Thomson

"What happens is what happens"

The composer does his composing at a writing table in the midst of his quite extraordinary apartment in the Chelsea Hotel on West 23d Street. His quarters are distinguished by Victorian wooden door frames, much painting and sculpture by artists he has known and piles of books, filing cabinets and assorted memorabilia from a life more filled with incident than most.

Busy With Writing

"One of the blessings of old age is that I wake up. The New York Times is at my doorstep at 7:15, and I take it back to bed with me. In the evenings, my friends come over or I go out. I wouldn't dream of cooking a meal myself."

Between the mornings and evenings, when he is not composing, Mr. Thomson does his correspondence, writes an essay occasionally (usually these days for The New York Review of Books), helps his secretary catalogue his manuscripts (holographs of them are now in the New York Public Library), talks to an endless stream of authors who want his reminiscences, and considers new collections of his own writings.

"I'm not doing a new book, but I'm thinking of getting up anoher collection, of pieces published in other places than The Herald Tribune. Most of them were in the old Modern Music quarterly or The New York Review. There's plenty of stuff for one or two more collections."

Mr. Thomson has to be coaxed into generalizations about himself: "I'm not one to sit down to meditate about myself or anyone else. If there's something I don't understand, I kind of worry about it until something comes to the surface. But I'm not a methodical worrier or a methodical meditator.

A Different Iconography

"It's through these inquiries from authors that you realize how different your life has been from what young people have now. When I start to explain, I realize how different everything was—the food, the quality of social intercourse, the iconography of life.

"Can you imagine a world in which people wrote little notes all day long and practically nobody had a telephone? Servants were available, or at least helpers, at a very reasonable rate, so you could get things done. I find it a little hard to accept Paris now as an expensive place."

Does he have any regrets? "What happens is what happens. You've played your cards and that's that. I'm not one to go around beating my breast, if I did play them the wrong way. I may have made many mistakes—certainly I've made many useless enemies. But you have to go on from there."

He may have made enemies, but he seems to have a lot of friends—so many that this week and next are full of 80th-birthday festivities—although not today: "Nobody wants to mix it up with Thanksgiving," he says.

Mr. Thomson is not one to brood over old friends who have died. "Look, boy," he growls, "when you're 80, you've got a lot of dead ones around. I like talking to young people. I like being among them. Not too young—teens are not my realm, but anything above 25. Max Jacob used to say that after 30, everybody's the same age."

Special to The New York Times

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 24—Women babble and men complain, taking time out to threaten suicide. The atmosphere, as one character observes, is filled with "ennui, depression, melancholia and gloom." In other words, despite Chekhov's own label—he called "Ivanov" a drama—this is a comedy.

To believe in Ivanov's desperation, we must also believe in his absurdity. A man of intelligence, he has become old at the age of 40, surrounded by "irrelevant people, irrelevant words." Though all his passion has been spent, he makes one last grasp at romance—with his friend's daughter Sasha as his wife lies dying of consumption. Ivanov is not merely, as he describes himself, "a pathetic object" but a ridiculous man, a Tartuffe, an imposter, who has played his last Hamlet scene.

"Ivanov" is of course early Chekhov and it bears the earmarks of a dramatist's inexperience. The women, for example, are sketchy. Each has one note, except for Sasha, who has two: impetuousness and determination. But this is also, in the best sense, a youthful play, filled with exuberance. Characters proclaim, even shout, their boredom. Seeing Ron Daniels's production at the Yale Repertory Theater, where it opened last night, we realize how spirited the play can be.

There are moments when it is almost too spirited: Sasha pursues Ivanov across the stage; he ends the chase by standing on a chair. But the verve and energy enrich the ennui. We can see Ivanov, a worn-out dynamo, hellbent for self-destruction. His suicide is not an irrevelant act, but an inevitable conclusion to a wasted life.

As Ivanov, Alvin Epstein is a loose bundle of nerve ends. "I'm becoming unhinged," moans the character. Mr. Epstein's Ivanov is already unhinged—flappable. This is an impossible world that he is consigned to: These whiners and rascals would drive any man mad.

Sitting in his study with his old friend, Sasha's well-to-do father (Eugene Troobnick), his mind filled with trouble, his desk a debris of herring and pickles, he suddenly breaks into sobs and then, just as suddenly, a spasm of laughter. In a flash we see—and understand—the two, equally miserable sides of Ivanov. As beautifully acted by Mr. Epstein, and as beautifully reacted by Mr. Troobnick—the scene contains no contradictions.

There is a confidence in the production when these two excellent character actors are at work; we are never aware that they are working. Mr. Epstein wears Ivanov's frenzy as if it were made-to-measure. Mr. Troobnick sinks gently into the father's solicitude; he is so weary that he dozes in the middle of one of his own tiresome stories.

Mr. Daniels has managed to mesh the eclectic styles and accents of the Yale company into an almost seamless production. As director, he has reduced "Ivanov" to essentials. Scenery is minimal—and not missed. Character is atmosphere. With their translation, Jeremy Brooks and Kitty Hunter Blair perform the same useful service for Chekhov that they did for Gorky, making him seem modern but not anachronistic.

There is also a sheen to other performances: Margaret Whitton's headstrong Sasha, Elzbieta Chezevska's fading wife, Alma Cuervo's buxom widow and Richard Bey as a young officer with a single-track mind.

Also in the cast are Yale's response to the Lunts: Robert and Norma Brustein. Mrs. Brustein's role as a stingy and sour matron is minor, but Mr. Brustein's is choice. He is a carping, aged count, a self-styled parasite and clown. Shuffling across the stage like a large penguin, he gives a big performance, full of twinkles, squints and hand-wringings. It is an amusing compendium of crochets adapted from English character actors. Should he ever give up his other theatrical activities, Mr. Brustein might make a living playing contrary old men.

By RICHARD EDER

At the start of "Shout at the Devil" the viewers, who are about to see a lot of elephant hunting, are told that "not a single animal was injured." The collapsing beasts were shot with stupefying darts.

The audience at "Shout," an adventure film that opened yesterday at showcase theaters, is treated with similar humaneness. No injuries, a thorough use of stupefying darts and some mild entertainment. There are about 60 minutes of mild entertainment, along with a few first-rate effects, in a film that is an incredible 128 minutes long.

The movie is set in East Africa—although, in fact, it was shot in South Africa—just before and during World War I. It is divided into fairly distinct parts. In the first, we follow the adventures of Flynn (Lee Marvin), an alcoholic ivory poacher who lives on a plantation in Mozambique with his daughter, Rosa (Barbara Parkins), and does his ivory hunting across the border in Tanganyika, then held by the Germans.

Flynn, joined by an expatriate Englishman, Sebastian, has some rough encounters with the local German district commissioner, Fleischer, who likes to shoot and hang people. In between sorties, Sebastian marries Rosa after a protracted and mock-comic fistfight with her father.

In the second part, war is declared and Fleischer crosses the border, sets fire to Flynn's house, and kills Sebastian and Rosa's baby. This turns Rosa into a woman with the single obsession of killing Fleischer; meanwhile the three are sent by the British Navy to scout out a German battle-cruiser hidden up a river, and then to blow it up. These things are eventually accomplished.

The movie has too much plot. All that action, conducted by characters without character—except for Fleischer, whose childlike joy in hurting people is almost appealing—produces lethargy. Roger Moore is rather good as Sebastian, a muted Errol Flynn type, but Miss Parkins plays her part with the verve of a damp rope. And Lee Marvin, who does toughness well enough, is insufferable when he is trying to be the comic Irishman. His doubletakes come like delayed mail.

All this said, the movie has its compensations. Rene Kolldehoff, as Fleischer, manages to be entertaining in his exaggerated villainy, and there is a lovely slow chase when, in an ancient paddle-boat steamer, he pursues Marvin, in a sailing dhow, down a winding jungle river. There is a good head-on charge by a crocodile, and the blowing-up of the warship has moments of interest and excitement. The movie is a passable midget in absurdly long pants.

"Shout" has been rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"). There are some fairly graphic scenes of natives being shot, and one that depicts, although we don't actually see it, a baby being thrown into a fire. Nevertheless, the film seems suitable for all but very young children.

Miss Cole's part of the show was a short one, only an hour, and she never really transcended the image of the hard-working trouper. But since so many of the very great performers in black idioms seem genuinely eccentric—Miss Franklin, Al Green—it's nice to come across someone who knows what she can do and sets about seriously to do it.

And one can give her further credit for not slipping into the devitalized Las Vegas pap that so many of her competitors aspire to. Miss Cole always has enough energy in her music to lend it some backbone, and if her show wasn't really lovable, it was eminently likable.

JOHN ROCKWELL

Ellis Is Guest of Chamber Society

By ALLEN HUGHES

Osian Ellis, the Welsh harpist, was guest of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center in its Tuesday concert at Alice Tully Hall (and for the preceding companion event on Sunday afternoon), and he was soloist in three works of different character that added much charm to the program.

There were Handel's Harp Concerto in B flat (which is probably better known in its organ concert manifestation), Debussy's "Danses Sacrée et Profane," just before intermission, and Britten's Harp Suite in C, composed for Mr. Ellis in 1969.

The Handel and Debussy pieces were played with a string quintet rather than the more customary string orchestra. Since all the string players were of solo caliber in their own right, the results in both works were admirable. Tone, intonation and balances were beautiful at all points. In fact, the Handel music came off better in terms of sound than it does when an orchestra is used.

Mr. Ellis introduced the Britten Suite with amusingly lighthearted remarks and played it deftly. The music is minor, to be sure, but Britten has treated the instrument with good sense and imagination and avoided the clichés and sentimentality that clutter up a lot of unaccompanied works.

The nonharp pieces of this program were Schumann's "Märchenerzählungen," for clarinet (Gervase de Peyer), viola (Walter Trampler) and piano (Charles Wadsworth), and Schubert's String Quartet in G minor (D. 173) (James Buswell and Yoshiko Nakura, violins; Mr. Trampler and Leslie Parnas). The Schubert was the concluding offering of the evening.

The Schumann works are trifles but likable, and perfectly worth reviving. They were played affectionately, as befitted them, and were well received.

Lorin Hollander Plays Schubert

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Lorin Hollander set himself an unusual challenge in his recital on Tuesday night at the 92d Street YM-YWHA. He played two piano sonatas by Schubert, the one in G (Op. 78) and the one in B flat (Op. post.). It is the kind of program one might have expected in an earlier age from Artur Schnabel or today from that seasoned veteran Rudolf Serkin.

At 35, with a 20-year career behind him, Mr. Hollander obviously wasn't afraid to test himself, and in large measure he was justified. If he did not solve all the problems in the sonatas—few people do—he sustained interest in his performances throughout the works' great length.

For the relatively speaking "lighter" sonata in B, Mr. Hollander followed the text in a fairly straight fashion. In some ways he was more interested in the ideas in the music than in pianistic purity.

Stressing melodies songfully, he sometimes ignored inner voices or even essential bass notes. Yet at other times he brought to the fore figurations that are ordinarily subordinated yet are worth extra attention. The delicacy with which he ended the sonata was particularly beguiling.

Mr. Hollander treated the great B flat Sonata much more dramatically, as its nature deserved. There was theatrical and startling handling of the first ending to the first movement's exposition. The slow movement began extremely slowly, which worked well, particularly since the pianist picked up the tempo and did not drag the movement out endlessly.

And so it went, but the point was that there was no flagging of attention to what Mr. Hollander was doing. Yet his playing was not egocentric: it seemed genuinely aimed at expounding Schubert's ideas. It was a good evening from a mature artist.

trange and idiosyncratic pro- conceived with wrongheaded e half-dozen figures in the ench classic have been plunged am world, half oriental and le. The queen, princess and the two sons—Seleucus and Antiochus —wear garish brocade kimonos. They are not so much set against the gold and scarlet backdrop as embedded in it, and move with gestures reminiscent of the Japanese theater. The two servants, who provide narration, squat in the foreground. They alternate between reciting their lines and whistling, whispering, screaming, beating a drum and laughing wildly.

For much of the play, the hexameters, with their gaunt and supple meanings, are deliberately broken up, clouded, made inaudible or chanted at a breakneck pace. It is as if they were spoken under water, breaking the surface sometimes and submerging again.

Mr. Ronse's intention is fairly apparent. He is not after Corneille's play, whose disciplined lines are hoops binding a powerful chaos. He is after the chaos, the dreams — or nightmares, rather—from which Corneille's lines were fashioned. He is not producing "Rodogune"—so much as submitting it to primal therapy.

The actors are bent to his purpose. The two sons, caught in the contradictions of their love for each other, their rivalry for Rodogune, and their devotion to their mother—contradictions that Cleopatra murderously exploits—are drifting and lifeless. They seem to be projections of Cleopatra's fantasy: there is a brilliantly staged scene where we see the queen seated, her enormous skirt spread before her, and suddenly the skirt seems to split and we see the sons roll away dressed in the identical material.

Rodogune, played by Laure Guizerix, is a racked, moon-colored creature who moves brokenly. The queen (Josette Boulva) is the play's motor, with a malevolence so pure it is near-sublime, but she too switches off and drifts.

Each of the four main characters is allowed to emerge from the dream —the queen most of all—for moments of Corneillean passion. But they break off and drop away. Mr. Ronse is not interested in the forms of their passion but in the formlessness behind them.

It doesn't work. It is done with beauty and control but at a great distance. It slips into an indistinctness that loses all force. A play is a constructed, not a living thing. It can exist only at its own level of disclosure. It has no other.

Patti Smith Personalizes Rock Act

Patti Smith, whos at the Bottom Line for a week-long run through Sunday, is laboring under something of a backlash at the moment, and it's partly her own fault. Originally she was a totally individual art-rocker, who chanted poetry over rock-flavored minimalist accompaniment.

But in the last year, she's aimed herself single-mindedly at the mainstream rock crowd. To her credit, she is hardly turning out mainstream rock.

But she's a rocker now, no doubt about it, and her recent second record reflects that by de-emphasizing her vocals and substituting loud, direct, amusing but not very personal rock-and-roll. As a result, she's opened herself up to deleterious comparisons with more established rockers, while at the same time she's still criticized by those who never bought her rock-poet act in the first place.

Poetry Cum Rock

At Tuesday's late show, Miss Smith seemed to be making something of an effort—half self-parodistic, as ever—to re-establish her artsy credentials in her hometown. Three T-shirts worn by band members said "RIMBAUD," "Mercedes-Benz" and "Librairie de France," and Miss Smith devoted the first half-hour not only to her patented idle rappings, but to poetry cum rock guitar (Lenny Kaye), just like when she and Mr. Kaye started out five long years ago.

Only it wasn't just the same. First of all, in her remarks to the crowd, Miss Smith was looser, more relaxed and more amusing than this observer has ever seen her; success seems to be doing her some good. At times, fleetingly, she looked almost glamorous. Second, the "poetry," in keeping with her current interest, wasn't so much the extraordinarily disjunct narrative images she used to work with, but guttural, inchoate chants.

Heroic, Funny and Proud

One still misses her way with words, but when the band came on—Richard Sohl is still "on leave," and on Tuesday the rock-solid bass player was Lee Fox, with Ivan Kral and Mr. Kaye moving over occasionally to keyboards — Miss Smith went a long way toward vindicating her self-image as a real rocker. She's now taken to making deafening, grating noises on an electric violin, and the heroic, funny and proud picture of her waving her bow like a torch, its frayed strings flying in all directions as the band blasted into action, will stick in the memory.

For all the power of her phrasing, Miss Smith still sings problematically, and her voice has been shredded into seemingly permanent hoarseness. But she has the spirit and the enlivening presence of the best rockers, and her band is maturing steadily behind her. It may not be all that she's capable of, since she's capable of the very best. But Tuesday's performance restored one's faith that she is still growing.

JOHN ROCKWELL

Jennifer Muller's 'Beach' Danced

Jennifer Muller's choreographic attention in the last several years has flickered back and forth between neat, formal performing vehicles and untidy "life as art" works. On Tuesday evening at the Roundabout Stage One she presented one of the untidiest works that she has ever given. It was only part of a larger piece but had a sloppy panache that will not easily be forgotten.

"Beach" was a full-evening dance divided into three acts, a relatively austere opening followed by a rambling Act II and a riotous final part. What began as a somber if somewhat inconclusive dance ended as a Mardi Gras.

The final spectacle was effective, but the whole piece rattled on far too long. Most conspicuously lacking was the creative shaping that would have pulled all of the myriad elements together into a purposeful sweep. Instead, direction yielded to indirection and false endings abounded.

Burt Alcantara's score commented wittily throughout and initially set the scene incorporating the sounds of waves and sea birds. Onto the bare stage the members of the company pounced one by one, fled from one another, and ended together. The asymmetrical grouping of four women—Jennifer Clark, Carol-rae Kraus, Angeline Wolf and Miss Muller—and three men contributed a certain instability to many of the groupings, since someone always seemed to be left out. The person usually merged into the group by breaking apart one of the couples or trios that had formed. A feeling of reverie generally prevailed.

In Act II the men and women talked, argued and complimented one another on having selected so fine a day for the beach. The men, Matthew Diamond, Christopher Pilafian and John Preston, carried and frolicked with the women, and all covered themselves with sunning lotion at one point

The dance incidents grew fewer as the talk increased, but the opening slow-motion sequence gave the striking impression of a moving group as it might appear at a great distance through a telescopic lens.

The final act had a deceptively tranquil start as Miss Muller reclined on an air mattress in splendid isolation. Slowly but with mounting urgency people began to occupy the space, forcing her to move. The assorted beachwear was very funny, as was the macho behavior of the men and the preening of the women. Miss Kraus was gaudily outrageous in a shocking pink turban and suit with the high price conspicuously attached.

The air was soon full of Frisbees, beachballs, shouting and blaring radio noise. Toward the end a frogman clambered up on stage. The image of a crowded beach was horribly accurate. Somehow, though, the dance got lost among the effects.

GOING OUT Guide

ROOTS & RHYTHMS Since its local advent in 1970, the Ballet Hispanico has presented numerous aspects of the Spanish heritage, from classical flamenco to Latin American folk traditions and street dances of New York, with a growing reputation for its young performers on a national level, under the direction of Tina Ramirez. Tomorrow night at 7:30, the ensemble opens a seven-program engagement at the Henry Street Playhouse, 466 Grand Street.

There will be premieres of ballets by Geoffrey Holder and Miss Ramirez and by such choreographers as Talley Beatty, Lois Bewley, Donald McKayle and Anna Sokolow.

Admission is $3.50, and $2.50 for students and the elderly. For program information and reservations: 766-9334.

HIS OWN THING A cheerfully attractive new club called Barbarann is off to a plucky opening on midtown's Restaurant Row, featuring a late-show parade of rising talent (five nights each) beginning with Betty Rhodes, who was saluted in John Wilson's review for The New York Times. Leata Galloway, of Broadway's "Rockabye Hamlet," has the 11:30 P.M. spotlight through Sunday, to be followed by Christopher Chadman, Linda Myers and Michael Vita.

There is more—for club patrons who want to look in earlier, around 9 P.M. Performing at intervals before the main show is Danny Apolinar, a pianist-singer with a solid reputation on the neon scene. Judging by the other night, no wonder.

A dynamic musician with an amusing unobtrusive line of chatter and a plaintive, ringing voice, he took over the podium keyboard, flanked by drums (Paul Ringe) and guitar-bass (L. A. Masana), and sailed through a batch of blues, jazz, ballads and show songs as though he were having the time of his life. He closed the first 45-minute set with a tune from the Off Broadway hit "Your Own Thing," modestly alluding to "one of my favorite shows." Mr. Apolinar co-wrote the score.

At the moment, he is booked to precede Miss Galloway through Sunday; the management says Mr. Apolinar will probably remain as the early-show regular.

It's easy to spot Barbarann (541-6150), with its brightly lit white facade (a holdover from the Mykonos restaurant) at 349 West 46th Street, near Ninth Avenue. Inside, amid archways and stained-glass panels, there's an intimate dining room, then an appealing bar opening on the large, comfortable showcase, where reasonable eating and drinking prices also prevail. Add a $3 cover charge starting with Mr. Apolinar at 9 o'clock.

FALL GREENERY With the Abbey company settled in at Brooklyn's Academy of Music, more Irish imports are due in the borough. To celebrate the arrival of the foreign visitors at the academy, the Masterworks Laboratory Theater is presenting "West of Galway," three short works of comedy and drama set in rural Ireland at the turn of the century by Lady Gregory, the co-founder of the Abbey Theater.

"Hyacinth Halvey" and "The Gaol Gate" were last presented professionally in New York by the Abbey unit in 1913, while "The Rising of the Moon" reportedly last appeared locally in 1932.

The "West of Galway" cast is headed by Ed Herlihy, a veteran of television and radio, and Martha Greenhouse, who last appeared on Broadway in William Inge's "Summer Brave." Walt Witcover and Don Marlette have directed.

The 12 performances, on a Friday through Monday schedule, begin tomorrow at 8 P.M. at the Masterworks showcase in Spencer Memorial Church, Remsen and Clinton Streets. Admission is by contribution. Reservations: 691-4367.

Harold Rome Sings Harold Rome

Harold Rome is singing songs he wrote for "Pins and Needles," "Call Me Mister," "Fanny," "Wish You Were Here" and other shows this week as part of the "Broadway at the Ballroom" series at the Ballroom, West Broadway just below Houston Street. But while it is delightful to hear his casual, rough-voiced performance of such songs as "South America, Take It Away," "Military Life" (with that deathless couplet, "through the slush and the slosh and the mish and the mosh") or his proof that a deliberate pastiche of cliches can be turned into a [illegible] pop song, "All of a Sudden My Heart Sings," the most provocative aspect of his performance is the sampling h[illegible] of songs from a new musical "G[illegible] Regards to Broadway and Remember M[illegible] to Harold Rome."

There is, for example, "Pink," which Mr. Rome describes as "a hell of an operatic number" and which proves to be a long listing of things pink or possibly pink, deliverd by Mr. Rome with manic Jimmy Durante intensity. Or "Tobacco, the Redman's Revenge," sung, Mr. Rome says, by three Indians looking down from heaven, an antismoking song that is scored for some of the most ghastly coughing heard outside a Broadway opening night.

Along with the songs, Mr. Rome, who has weathered the years well, offers glimpses of nonmusical sidelights on his songs—the local F.B.I. men who dropped into "Pins and Needles" every night just for the "G-m[illegible]" [illegible] take advantage of the opportunity to laugh at their boss. Or Barbra Streisand's [illegible] the [illegible] of Miss Marmelstein in "I Can Get It for You Wh[illegible]" [illegible] now I can get a telephone." Singing or talking, Mr. Rome has a winning way and some winning material.

...rgan, the second baseman of the Reds, getting a kiss from a daughter, ..., at Oakland home yesterday after he was named the M.V.P. of the National League. At left, is his other daughter, Lisa.

Grich Third Free Agent Signed by Angels; Morgan Voted M.V.P. Second Year in Row

Joe Morgan, who may be baseball's best all-round player, easily won his second consecutive National League most-valuable-player award yesterday, then took immediate note of the current rush to sign free agents to lucrative contracts.

"Joe Morgan has done something unique," Morgan said by telephone from his Oakland, Calif., home, "and I think his contract should be unique."

In light of the $1 million to $2 million deals that have been spread around in the last week or so, the Cincinnati Reds, who already have lost Don Gullett to the Yankees, will have to come up with something special for their fifth M.V.P. winner in the last seven seasons or he could go the way of Reggie Jackson, Bobby Grich and assorted other free agents.

In helping the Reds gain their second straight World Series championship, the 33-year-old second baseman batted .320, hit 27 home runs, drove in 111 runs, scored 113, stole 60 bases, amassed a league-high .576 slugging percentage, struck out only 41 times, walked 114 times and grounded into a mere two double plays in 472 official times at bat during the regular season.

He won the award by drawing 19 first-place votes and 311 points from a 24-man panel of the Baseball Writers Association of America. George Foster, his disappointed teammate, finished second, receiving the other five first-place votes and 221 points.

Morgan, only the second National Leaguer to win consecutive M.V.P. awards (Ernie Banks was the other, in 1958-59), isn't going anywhere just yet. He played last season under a one-year contract for an estimated $225,000 and now will seek a multiyear contract with even more impressive numbers.

"I'm not talking in terms of what Catfish Hunter got," the 5-foot-7-inch Morgan said, "but people who haven't been free agents, plus some of the things the free agents have gotten. That's not to say I want to be the highest-paid player around because I think that's unrealistic."

Morgan, who received 21½ first-place votes and 321½ points in last year's balloting, was asked whether he could see free agency in his future.

"Of course, I could envision it," he

The California Angels, acting more aggressively with Gene Autry's bank account than Autry ever did on his horse, Champion, signed Bobby Grich last night, filling their quota of three free agents.

Intent on becoming an instant contender in the American League's Western Division, the heretofore lowly Angeles last week signed Joe Rudi and Don Baylor, a pair of Oakland outfielders, and now have spent an estimated total of $5.25 million for their new talent. Most clubs are permitted to sign only two players, but the Angels, who finished in a tie for fourth place last season were allowe dthree because they had lost three players to free agency.

Grich, Baltimore's former second baseman who signed a multiyear contrat for an estimated $1.75 million had been sought for a while last week by the Yankees. But then George Steinbrenner switched his targets and set his sights on Reggie Jackson.

Steinbrenner and officials of three other clubs were in Chicago yesterday, holding what probably would be the final negotiations with Jackson and his business partner-agent, Gary Walker.

Jackson Is Reported Near a Decision

There were indications that Jackson could select one of the four clubs at any moment.

Jackson and Walker spent the day moving from room to room in a Chicago hotel, meeting with the various millionaires or their representatives: Ray Kroc, owner of the San Diego Padres; Steinbrenner, principal owner of the Yankees; John McHale, president of the Montreal Expos, and Hank Peters, general manager of the Baltimore Orioles.

The Orioles, desperately trying to win Jackson back, reportedly raised their offer from $1.5 million to $2.5 million. Kroc is said to have agreed to give the 30-year-old outfielder what he has asked for, and the Expos are believed to have offered a dazzling deal.

It wasn't known what Steinbrenner offered Jackson, although besides money, the Yankee boss is the only one of the finalists who can offer the charismatic Jackson the biggest stage

"...e Morgan has done something unique," he said yester... "and I think his contract should be unique."

But if the Reds' front ...doesn't agree with Joe Morgan's evaluation of him... might play out his option next season. As baseball's ...mplete player, he might be worth more, even at 34 ...old entering the 1978 season, than Reggie Jackson ...by Grich, the most expensive objets d'art in this ...auction.

...w salaries are determined," says Dick Wagner, the ...vice president who handles negotiations, "is the opin... the ball club, and I wouldn't want to comment ..."

...ng the contract negotiations with Gullett last season, ...ds' front office would not surrender to the ground ...stablished by Gullett's agent, Jerry Kapstein.

"...were never overly optimistic about signing Gullett," ...Wagner, "because of Kapstein's terms—both mone... and length of contract. Once you've paid a large ...t of money to one player, you have to face up to the other athletes and all the people in the organization. It's the ripple effect."

But if the Reds' front office gets stubborn about signing players, there could be a tidal-wave effect.

Jerry Kapstein has four Reds among his clients—David Concepcion, the shortstop; Gary Nolan, the starting pitcher; Rawly Eastwick and Will McEnany, the relief pitchers. If they were to seek the "security" that is fashionable now, they might also be available to the highest bidder after next season.

Except for Bench, signed through next season, and Cesar Geronimo, with a new two-year contract, the Reds must also sign their other name players or risk losing them after next season—Morgan, Rose, Tony Perez, George Foster, Ken Griffey, Dan Driessen, Jack Billingham, Pat Zachry and Fred Norman.

Eventually, some of those players might be known as "The Unmentionables" in Sparky Anderson's office.

'The Greatest Individual'

The manager's reaction to Don Gullett's departure is typical of the Reds' insistence on blind loyalty. During the World Series a year ago, Sparky Anderson often called Don Gullett "the greatest individual I have ever met in sports. He is Don Gullett from the hills of Lynn, Ky., and he'll never change. I just wish everybody in sports could look in the mirror and say the same." But when Don Gullett pitched for the Reds without a contract last season, Sparky Anderson no longer called him "the greatest individual," and when Don Gullett signed with the Yankees the manager eliminated his name.

"The name will be dropped," Sparky Anderson said. "I will never bring his name up again."

The Reds like to think of themselves as a "family" organization, but when Don Gullett, the new Yankee, was asked last week if that were a valid description, he looked away.

"I'd rather," he said, "not comment on that."

To replace Gullett, the Reds probably will trade Tony Perez, the 34-year-old first baseman, for a left-handed pitcher and install Dan Driessen, their designated hitter during the World Series, at first base. Without both Gullett and Perez, the Reds may not be the team they were in winning the World Series the last two years. And if several players threaten to become free agents by not signing, the atmosphere may not be conducive to winning another divisional title. Bob Howsam, the Reds' president, is among the most conservative of baseball's conservative owners. Among the most stubborn, some say.

"We may be traditional," Dick Wagner says, "but we're not stubborn."

But until recently, the Reds had "inner conceit." Now it's showing.

But ... he would have nothing to do with field operation of the team, leaving that to Franks. "We'll collaborate in naming the coaches," he said.

Franks managed the San Francisco Giants to four second-place finishes in the National League, and was Kennedy's first and only choice to succeed Marshall. "He's an excellent baseball man, and I don't think his age is a factor in his case," Kennedy said.

Kennedy, who played for five major league teams, began his managerial career under Franks when the latter owned the Salt Lake City minor league team.

The 56-year-old Kennedy, a Chicago native and a former White Sox infielder, replaces R. (Salty) Saltwell, who was brought over from the club's business side to become general manager for the 1976 season. Saltwell takes over the team's business affairs and the title of general manager is dropped.

Kennedy said he believed the Cubs, who had a 75-87 won-lost record in each of the last two seasons, should play at .500 or better in 1977, but he warned, "There's not going to be a miracle in one year. It's going to take some time."

Although he said he was not well acquainted with the Cubs' personnel, he said there was "enough talent to be representative."

"I didn't see the Cubs last year, but I know we need a shortstop, a catcher, a power hitter and a left-handed pitcher, but any club in baseball is looking for the same thing."

Kennedy said he was "not in accord with paying millions of dollars" to sign free agents because "I don't think anybody ever won a war with a bunch of mercenaries."

His primary objective with the Cubs, he said, would be to build up the scouting system, which he termed "inadequate," with the idea of improving the quality of the farm system. The club will add one rookie team to its farm system next year.

There's no "deadline," he said, for him and Franks to produce a winner with the Cubs. "If Herman can do the job, if we both can do the job, we'll stay," he said.

Rangers Get 2-2 Deadlock With Flyers

By ROBIN HERMAN

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 24 — John Davidson offset some poor play by his teammates at the Spectrum tonight making 37 saves on shots by the Philadelphia Flyers to preserve a 2-2 tie.

Gary Dornhoefer tied the score with 7:07 remaining in the game. The Rangers allowed him to move in alone on Davidson, and he shot over the prone goalie for his second goal of the game.

The Rangers had just six shots on goal in the final period.

The Rangers, meeting a team from the Patrick Division for the first time this season, did not look good early in the game, and except for the hard work of a few players, such as John Davidson in goal, Rod Gilbert on attack and Pete Stemkowski in killing penalties, they might have fallen behind the Flyers. But, instead, they led after two periods, 2-1. By that time Philadelphia had sent 30 shots at Davidson, who was having another fine night after his performance in a 3-2 victory over Vancouver on Monday night.

On the Rangers' first shot, after almost five minutes of play, Gilbert beat Bernie Parent, who was making his 15th consecutive start in the Flyer goal. Gilbert took the puck off the skates of Jimmy Watson, backing up in the Flyer zone, and shot a low 35-footer that went just inside the right post.

Nets Beat Spurs, 99-91, As Archibald Sparkles

By THOMAS ROGERS

Special to The New York Times

UNIONDALE, L.I., Nov. 24—In what was probably his best effort since joining the New York Nets before the beginning of the National Basketball Association season, Nate Archibald drove his team to a 99-91 triumph over a tired San Antonio Spurs club tonight before a lively but sparse crowd of 6,583 at Nassau Coliseum.

The 6-foot speedster drove through the center of the San Antonio defense throughout the game, dishing out 15 assists and scoring 23 points, the high total in the sloppily played game.

Largely through the efforts of Archibald, the New York frontcourt came to life offensively. Jan van Breda Kolff, with 20 points, and Kim Hughes, with 14, both notched their highs for the season in point production. Van Breda Kolff also contributed on defense, holding Larry Kenon to 16 points, 4 below his season average.

Tim Bassett, at center, also was a big factor for the Nets, pulling down 21 rebounds as the home team beat the Spurs on the boards, 48-41.

Nothing Spurs Spurs

Except for a three-minute spurt in the fourth quarter, when they reduced a 13-point Net lead to 3 points, the Spurs seemed lethargic. They played last night in Buffalo and seemed unable to muster any enthusiasm against New York. George Gervin, normally a 23-point scorer, took only nine shots and scored 12 points before fouling out in the fourth quarter.

Meanwhile, the Nets seemed full of run, although on Monday they had returned home from a 17-day trip in which they won only two of seven games. Archibald, in particular, was a dynamo tonight.

"I try to penetrate and give one of my forwards an open shot," he said. "In order for us to win, this is what we have to do. To give the guys on my team more confidence, I have to get them the ball when they're open. Jan was wide open a lot. Teams have been concentrating on our guards. I'm looking to pass more than shoot now. I just hope my guys keep their heads up."

The Nets, hitting 49 percent of their shots as Archibald's clever passing led to a good shot selection, pulled away from the Spurs after an even first quarter. Their biggest lead, 18 points at 78-60, was reached as the teams entered the final 12 minutes.

Boe Appears Cooperative

Mack Calvin, who scored all his 12 points in the last quarter, ignited a San Antonio challenge that cut New York's lead to 3 points at 86-83 with six minutes to play. But then John Williamson, van Breda Kolff and Archibald ripped off three straight baskets to make the Nets' lead secure again, 92-83, with four minutes left.

Earlier in the day, Roy Boe, owner of the Nets, complied with a subpoena from the office of the New York State Attorney General and displayed a willingness to reach a compromise with angry season-ticket holders who have protested over the sale last month of Julius Erving to the Philadelphia 76ers.

Boe turned over the team's records of ticket sales to Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz and then negotiated on possible settlements to the com-

Rutgers Favored to Stay Unbeaten

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

If Rutgers beats Colgate tonight at Giants Stadium and Pittsburgh defeats Penn State tomorrow night in Pittsburgh, it will be the first time since 1940 that two Eastern major college football teams managed to get through the same regular season undeated and untied.

This is part of the biggest weekend in what has been one of the most interesting seasons in many years in this region. The season will end with the traditional Army-Navy game at Philadelphia on Saturday. Even this service game shows promise of being more attractive than most recent Army-Navy games. The season could also end with Pitt, which is ranked No. 1 in the nation, established as the unofficial national champion and Tony Dorsett, the Panthers' tailback, winning the Heisman Trophy as the outstanding college player.

Lafayette which was ranked as a major team in 1940, and Boston College posted perfect records 36 years ago. Since then 16 Northeast major college teams have gone undefeated and untied-one at a time. Princeton and Maryland were unbeaten and untied in 1951. However, the Terps are generally considered Southerners because of their affiliation with the Southern and Atlantic Coast Conferences.

Maryland became the first major team to complete its 1976 regular season undefeated and untied when the Terps beat Virginia last Saturday. Rutgers and Pitt are the only two major teams remaining in the nation that can equal Maryland's perfect record for this season.

Rutgers has not only won 10 games this season but also has won 17 in a row for the longest current major winning streak in the country. Despite this, Rutgers was not invited to a bowl attractive enough for the Scarlet Knights to want to make the trip. They turned down a chance to go to the new Independence Bowl at Shrevesport, La., and play McNeese State.

Rutgers will be favored to beat Colgate, a team that was also undefeated and untied until the Red Raiders lost at Army in their last game, 29-13. The Red Raiders, under a new coach, Fred Dunlap, have an 8-1 won-lost record.

Coach Frank Burns of Rutgers said: "We would have liked to play a major school in a bowl game and show our ability. But they [the players] decided to be satisfied with an undefeated campaign and look forward to enjoying free time for the holidays. They've earned the rest but it won't be an enjoyable rest if we don't finish with a victory. And we'll have to work for that victory."

The Rutgers-Colgate game will be televised by ABC (Channel 7) in the metropolitan area starting at 8:30 P.M. ABC will also televise the Penn State-Pittsburgh game at 9 P.M.

plaints of the fans. He is expected to return to the Attorney General's office in a few days with a possible solution.

Marvin Barnes, the Detroit forward who was suspended three times for missing team practices and physicals, played his first game as a Piston. Barnes received boos and cheers when he entered in the closing moments of the first half. He played only one minute of each half, failed to score and had one foul.

Pistons 118, 76ers 117

DETROIT, Nov. 24 (AP)—Chris Ford scored 22 points and played superb defense tonight in leading the Detroit Pistons to a 118-117 victory over the Philadelphia 76ers. The Pistons never trailed.

Ford, who scored 16 points in the second half, made a diving stop to save a pass from going out of bounds in the closing seconds and prevent the 76ers from setting up a possible winning shot.

A capacity crowd of 11,111 jammed Cobo Arena, with the big attraction being Julius Erving of the 76ers. Erving scored 25 points, but George McGinnis topped Philadelphia with 29, and Lloyd Free added 21—17 in the second half. Bob Lander topped the Pistons with 25 points and 15 rebounds.

Celtics 133, Kings 111

BOSTON, Nov. 24 (AP)—The Boston Celtics, led by Sidney Wicks, had seven players score in double figures tonight in rolling to a 133-111 victory over the Kansas City Kings.

Rangers Play 2-2 Tie With Flyers As Davidson Stands Out in Goal alone in this game. His teammates failed to work the puck over the red line with any consistency and left breaking wings standing idly at the boards. The Ranger power play, which had been foiled the other night in St. Louis on eight attempts, was also poor tonight, owing to the languor of Phil Esposito and Ken Hodge, who gave up the puck easily and were regularly a stride away from catching the pesky Flyer penalty killers. The Flyers had more shots on goal while short-handed than the Rangers had on two power plays in the first period.

Davidson Thwarts Effort

Davidson stopped Don Saleski on two point-blank shots while the Flyers were short-handed and later turned away shots by Gary Dornhofer and Paul Holmgren at even strength. In the second period the Rangers goalie blocked Rick MacLeish's dead-on shot, and when Orest Kindrachuk drove into the slot area Davidson strode forward and took the legs out from under the Flyer forward.

Davidson's work enabled the Rangers to survive on their sputtering offense, and soon Ron Greschner, the defenseman, scored a goal on a pass from Esposito. The Ranger captain drew Larry Bladon to him in the slot area and then rolled out of theplay with the Flyer defenseman as Greschner moved in and shot the puck behind Parent.

The Flyers eventually beat Davidson by collapsing on the Ranger slot area, and Dornhoefer rolled in the puck on an assist from Joe Watson. Moments later the Flyers thought they had tied the score on a goal by Bobby Clarke, but the shot was ruled no good because of an outside pass. The Flyers had some of their toughest battlers on the ice just before the play—Holmgren, Jack McIlhargey and Bob Kelly, and with the crowd roaring encouragement the group had muscled into the Ranger zonew hen Clarke shot.

Murdoch Used Sparingly

Although the Rangers were having trouble pressuring Parent, Coach John Ferguson used his top scorer, Don Murdoch, only sparingly with his linemates, Walt Tkaczuk and Greg Polis.

Esposito, who did have a lot of ice time, was missing numerous close chipping opportunities. With 12:20 to go he had a yawning net at which to shoot but sent the puck well wide of the goal. This was a critical failure, as the Rangers nursed a one-goal lead.

Davidson kept kicking away the Flyer shots successfully until Dornhoefer broke in alone with 7:07 remaining. Davidson moved out of the crease and fell to the ice as he anticipated the shot, but Dornhoefer lifted the puck in, for his second goal of the game.

N.C.A.A. to Honor Mayor of Los Angeles

The National Collegiate Athletic Association will present Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles with the annual Theodore Roosevelt award, the N.C.A.A.'s highest honor, at the association's annual luncheon on Jan. 11 in Miami Beach, it was announced yesterday. Bradley, an outstanding middle-distance runner on the University of California, Los Angeles, track team in 1938 through 1940, was selected for the "Teddy," which goes each year to a person "for whom competitive athletics in college and attention to physical well-being thereafter have been important factors in a distinguished career of national significance and achievement." Bradley became the first black mayor of Los Angeles in 1972, following a career as a Los Angeles policeman and councilman.

Citing "consistent mismatches and violations of most of the rules and regulations of our code," the Miami Boxing Commission fined Chris Dundee $500 and suspeded him indefinitely. Dundee, brother of Angelo Dundee, who trains Muhammad Ali, has been promoting fights in Miami Beach for 25 years. Chris Dundee was not at the commission meeting.

"I didn't know anything about it. Nobody invited me to the meeting," Dundee said, adding, "I don't know what it's all about. I thought they had more sense. They've got to okay everything I do, every contract. Besides, they are not the real boss, it's the City Council that appoints them.

"He has made a shambles of the fight game in this area," said Commissioner Nat Potamkin of the Miami organization. "We just aren't going to stand for it any more." Dundee has 10 days to file an appeal with the city manager.

Dave Cowens of the Boston Celtics is not the only unhappy man in the National Basketball Association. Coach Tate Locke of the Buffalo Braves is unhappy with the play of Bob McAdoo, the league's leading scorer the last three seasons.

McAdoo played only 19 minutes Tuesday night as the San Antonio Spurs handed the Braves their sixth consecutive defeat. Locke said, "I'm just not going to play him if he's going to play that way. There's no movement after the ball goes in to him. When one man holds the ball like that, it takes away from Adrian Dantley, John Shumate and guys in the backcourt." McAdoo is in the final year of his contract and reportedly is seeking a healthy raise. Locke added, "Something's obviously troubling him. I don't know for sure what it is, but I'd like to. He's a winner, no question about that."

Pete Maravich of New Orleans, the No. 2 scorer in the N.B.A., said he considered quitting basketball earlier this season for lack of motivation.

"To play this game night after night, to get beat up and have your ankles broken and teeth knocked out, you wonder, 'why am I here?'" Maravich, whose salary is in the $450,000 bracket, said he became motivated about a week and a half ago, but refused to explain the motivation. He scored 37 points in a Jazz victory over Golden State Tuesday night.

Army-Navy Rated Tossup

Navy has beaten Army the last three times and in each case the Middies were highly favored. It is virtually impossible to pick a favorite in this year's Army-Navy game. The Cadets would be the choice except that Leamon Hall, their quarterback, is suffering from a sore right shoulder (his passing arm).

Hall, rated one of the nation's leading passers, "has not thrown his fastball for three weeks," said Smith. The coach said his 6-foot-6-inch quarterback would not be able to toss much more than "knuckleballs and soft curves" against Navy.

Neither Army nor Navy has an outstanding deefnsive unit that can compare to the strong defense of Navy in 1975. Also, neither team has a strong running game as the leading groundgainer for each team has not gained 500 yards.

Navy has improved in the last few weeks, nearly upsetting Notre Dame and then scoring an upset over Georgia Tech, 24-28. Bob Leszczynski, Navy's quarterback, has done well in the last three games, passing for 730 yards with 53 completions in 94 attempts.

Army and Navy brass will celebrate the 50th anniversary of one of the most memorable service games—the 21-21 deadlock before 110,000 fans in 1926 in the game that dedicated Soldier Field in Chicago. Navy, which was undefeated in 1926, was recognized as the national champion after that game.

....262 career hitter, who will ...s old in January, is one of Jerry Kapstein's many clients. One of the reasons he signed with the Angels was the proximity of Anaheim to his home n Long Beach. Another reason was the Angels' aggressiveness in obtaining Baylor and Rudi.

"When that happened," Grich said. "I said to myself this is going to be a tough ball club, and here I am."

One of the reasons the Yankees cooled off on Grich was that Steinbrenner didn't want to spend so much money on what could amount to an experiment, playing one of baseball's best second baseman at short.

Steinbrenner last week questioned the ethics involved in the Angels' attempt to sign a third player. He charged that they didn't make much of an effort to sign their three minor leaguers and said they were happy to lose them so they could sign an extra free agent.

The Angels, whose principal owner is Autry, the former cowboy, denied the charges.

While Jackson was experiencing a hectic day in Chicago, authorities in Montreal said they would not prosecute the star after customs officials found a small amount of marijuana—less than an ounce—in his luggage last Friday.

"It was only pot, not even an ounce," said a Federal Crown prosecutor, who noted that possession of up to two ounces of marijuana is legal in California, where Jackson lives.

The prosecutor said Jackson was not with his luggage because it had been delayed in California.

"The investigation showed that he did not have control over his luggage for at least 12 hours," the official added. "There is no question of laying a charge of ilegal importation."

Jets Give Green Light to Green Backfield for Sunday

By GERALD ESKENAZI
Special to The New York Times

HEMPSTEAD, L.I., Nov. 24—The Jets' future became the present today when Coach Lou Holtz decided to start an all-rookie backfield this Sunday.

There will also be a rookie receiver, perhaps an all-rookie linebacker corps —in all as many as nine first-year players among the 22 offensive and defensive starters.

There is nothing unusual about Richard Todd starting at quarterback. He did that the last four games with Joe Namath quickly relieving him at a predetermined time in the last two. But that has changed now.

"There is no present time at which Joe Namath will come in," said Holtz.

This might have been the latest housecleaning of the Holtz regime, but it won't be the last. It is a regime that will continue to bend.

"I'm sure there will be many changes next year,' he said. "Nothing as drastic as this year—but there will be changes in the off-season."

Coach Speaks His Mind

Holtz's speaking style is a combination stream-of-consciousness and Southern revivalism.

"He thinks out loud," is the way one Jet-watcher describes him.

So when Holtz went to great lengths today to praise his rookies but said hardly a word about his veterans, did that mean he was displeased with them?

When he said, "There's no way we're going to throw the ball 60 times against Baltimore," was he faulting Namath's 35 passes—and five interceptions—last Sunday?

Holtz responded, "No," when pressed.

But Louie Giammona will start at running back instead of Steve Davis, and Howard Satterwhite will be the wide receiver instead of David Knight ("Satterwhite is an excellent blocker and caught the two balls he could reach last Sunday").

Rookies Behind Lines

The Giammona-Todd-Clark Gaines combination gives the New Yorkers a rookie backfield against the Eastern Division-leading Colts at Baltimore. Another all-rookie unit looms at linebacker, where Larry Keller probably will play in the middle for the injured John Ebersole. Greg Buttle plays the left side and Bob Martin the right.

And if Richard Neal is unable to play at defensive right end, Larry Faulk will join the front four. That squad already has a rookie, Larry Pillers.

When Holtz does make off-season changes, he said, "they will be for talent only."

In other words, he has found the elusive character that he sought when building (and breaking down the weak underpinning), and apparently this satisfies him.

"Maybe I couldn't say that last year," Holtz said, " but I can say that this year. Maybe we hurt ourselves on giving up talent, but in the long run it will pay off."

The Jets could be a factor in a roundabout way in the playoffs because they wind up meeting the Washington Redskins and Cincinnati Bengals after the Colts. Holtz, though, is not under pressure to play his veterans for these games, which could decide where New York's opponents finish.

"He has not won with the people you expected might win for him," explained the executive director of the National Football League, Jim Kensil. "So with a team that's not going well, you can't complain if the coach doesn't use his first-string players. You can't really tell who will win or lose for the Jets."

Holtz hinted that this might have been a different season if the veterans had done what he had expected.

Five-Year Plan of Sorts

"When you find a team making the playoffs, you'll find the veterans playing the best football of their careers. When you find a team out of the running, you'll find the veterans not playing up to their potential. Anything you get from a rookie is a bonus."

He will not, he said, "cast off all the veterans. No. But can you imagine if our rookies for the next five years have a better year every year?"

So there will be no trades to plug a hole for a year or two. He will take a veteran in a trade, he said, but that would be "long-term veterans only."

Despite what he termed a "down mood," he said that there were some good things reflect on for the holiday. "There's a good nucleus here. But they're going to have to play the best football of their careers next year, and many veterans are going to have to bounce back."

And does Holtz still feel like a rookie coach?

Colts 21-Point Choices

There is good precedent for the Colts being favored by 21 points on Sunday. On the road, the New Yorkers have been outscored by an average of 20.5 points in their six games....Gaines has yielded his lead in the rookie race. He has amassed 445 yards in his five starts and 482 overall. Larry Gaines of Detroit, no relation, leads the rookies with 523...The Jets hold their only Shea Stadium workout on Thursday, followed by their traditional Thanksgiving dinner at the park.

Giants' Pass-Rusher Is Coming On Quickly

By MICHAEL KATZ
Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y., Nov. 24—Jim Zorn, the Seattle Seahawk quarterback who will face the Giants on Sunday, is left-handed.

Jim Zorn often throws from rollouts.

Jim Zorn might not see George Martin until it is too late.

For the first time this season, the Giants' defensive left end will be lined up on the "blind," or nonthrowing, side of the quarterback. "Yeah, he won't see me coming," said Martin.

The Giants have, though. George Martin, in his second National Football League season and first as a starter, has been one of the main reasons the Giants defense has allowed but three touchdowns in the four games John McVay has been head coach.

George Martin

Backing Their Errors

"It's all mental, knowing he's with me," said Martin. "I know if I make a mistake, he'll make up for it. And now I know if he makes a mistake, and Mendy doesn't make many, I can help out."

Martin's problem earlier this season was the fear of making mistakes. "I was playing kind of cautious," he explained. "It was my first time as a starter and I was afraid of making mistakes. I was forgetting to be mean, to play with abandon."

"You don't ever want any of them to feel that way," said McVay. "You've got to play all out. If you play with great enthusiasm and hustle, you can cover a lot of mistakes." "Coach Fry (Jay Fry, the defensive line coach) was telling me I was too cautious," Martin said. "He told me don't worry about the traps, don't worry about the pass, don't worry about the run. Just play football."

Speed, Size, Quickness

George Martin looks like he should be able to play football. He's 6 feet 4 inches, 246 pounds, fast enough to have been a tight end at the University of Oregon and quick enough to have been a high school all-America in basketball.

"He reminds me a lot of Willie Davis," said John Symanck, the Giants' secondary coach and a former teammate of the great defensive end of the championship Green Bay Packers. "Same size, the same speed."

Martin was only an 11th-round draft choice last year, but after one day in camp, he "knew" he would make the team. "That's not cockiness, that's confidence," he said.

He does not like quarterbacks, right-handed or left-handed. But when he talked of facing a left-hander who sprints out, he spoke with the enthusiasm of a kid awaiting Christmas. George Martin can't wait to unwrap Jim Zor.

"He'll be able to see me when he drops straight back," Martin said. "But he sprints out a lot."

Playing It Too Rough

Martin already is earning a reputation as a quarterback-killer. He knocked Roger Staubach silly seven weeks ago—well after the Dallas Cowboy quarterback had thrown the ball—and drew a 15-yard penalty for unnecessary roughness.

"Roughing the passer, that was a stupid mistake," he said. "I was angry. We were losing and things weren't going too good."

Things never go too good for a team with a 1-10 won-lost record, but playing a team with a 2-9 won-lost record Sunday should help.

"This is an awfully big game for us," said McVay. "We've looked pretty decent the last three games and now we've got to win the last three games."

The coach was pleased that the team's recent progress was not slowed when it fell behind, 14-0, last Sunday at Denver before losing to the Broncos, 14-13. "Last week the roof could've come in," he said. "Maybe it would have if this wasn't a group of guys with character. I think last week's game was another indication of how close we are to being a very respectable football team."

The Aches and Panis

It's also an injured team. Jack Gregory, the right end, is out, probably for the season, with a torn knee ligament. John Hicks, the right guard, has a sprained knee, and although he insists he'll be able to play Sunday, McVay wasn't so sure. Jimmy Robinson and Ray Rhodes, the regular wide receivers, have groin pulls and did not work today, although Rhodes is expected back. Harry Carson, the middle lineback, and Doug Kotar, halfback, are listed as probable for Sunday, but did not practice. Hicks's two replacements, Bill Ellenbogen and Ron Mikolajczyk, practiced on injured ankles. Ed Marshall, a reserve wide receiver, sprained an ankle in practice.

But Craig Morton did not appear bothered by his injured elbow. The quarterback was throwing well, although sometimes to wide receivers like Gordon Bell, who is normally a halfback; Dave Jennings, the punter, and Joe Danelo, the placekicker.

Bayside-St. Francis Clash Isn't Just Another Rivalry

By ARTHUR PINCUS

Bayside and St. Francis won their League football titles on Saturday; today they play for bragging rights. The two Queens schools are trying to establish a neighborhood rivalry with a Thanksgiving Day game. Bayside routed Clinton, 29-6, for the Public Schools Athletic League title, and St. Francis wrapped up the Catholic Schools Football League crown with a 44-0 destruction of Holy Trinity. A game between the Catholic League champion and the P.S.A.L. winner has never occurred in New York, but it is a common occurrence in other cities and always attracts a big crowd.

High School Sports

This game is pure coincidence, however, and it falls short of a true city championship. The game is scheduled for Bayside's field at 32d Avenue and the Clearview Expressway at 10:30 A.M.

"It's impossible to prepare for a game like this," Coach Vince O'Connor of St. Francis said yesterday. "The biggest problem is getting the boys to an emotional edge. Both teams have reached their goals."

But the situation is the same for each team. A victory would give the players the chance to be called the best in the city, unofficially, of course.

Last year the teams began their series with a Thanksgiving game in the rain and the result was a 6-6 tie. St. Francis had lost in the C.S.F.L. final and Bayside was not a playoff club. This year the two teams have been awesome as they moved to their titles.

Bayside, led by Chy Davidson and Shawn Covington, runners, has rolled up 367 points in its eight victories. St. Francis has scored 251 points, winning seven and losing one. The keys for the Terriers are their running backs, Dom DeSimone and Frank Doria, and an offensive line led by Tom Capone, an end, John Pomerico, a tackle, and Richie Raaf, the center. The success of those players is particularly pleasing to O'Connor.

The kids developed to their full potential," he said. "That's the most satisfying part of being a teacher-coach." As for today's game, though, O'Connor is not very optimistic. "I don't think we can play better than last Saturday."

For his counterpart at Bayside, Neal Nelson, this will be his last game as head coach. He will switch jobs with his assistant, Joe Pepe, next season. Pepe is a St. Francis graduate and a former aide to O'Connor who was recommended to Nelson by O'Connor.

"Our kids are really high for the game," said Nelson. "They're just beat up from Clinton. We're preparing for them just like we prepare for anybody, we just don't have as much time."

City championship or just a contest between two strong teams, the teams expect a lot of fans at the game and that means money for their football programs next year.

In New Jersey today Ted Blackwell of New Providence continues his mighty march toward a state scoring record when his team meets Summit at home at 11 A.M. Blackwell has 222 points, 24 fewer than the record, and has two games to achieve the goal.

Also in New Jersey, Westfield and Plainfield play their traditional holiday game. On Saturday, Dec. 4, these same teams will play for a state sectional championship.

On Long Island two playoff games will be held today. Port Washington plays West Hempstead at Carle Place Field and Seaford meets Carey at Bethpage. Both games are at 10:30 A.M. Saturday afternoon, Farmingdale takes on Berner at Carle Place and Cold Spring Harbor plays Floral Park at Bethpage in the morning.

Aviation Takes Soccer Title

Jairo Ruiz and Eleazar Escobar scored in the first half to give Aviation 2-0 victory over Bushwick in the Public Schools Athletic League B Division soccer championship game at Queens College yesterday. It was the third shutout in four playoff games for Aviation's goalie, Walter Moran, and his 10th of the season.

Barkless Dog Story Spurs Creation of Basenji Kennel

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

Twenty years ago, Shirley Chambers read a story about Basenjis—the barkless dogs—and became intrigued. "When I saw an ad for some puppies, I drove to the breeder and left with an 8-week-old red and white, Khajan of Storybook," said the Altoona, Pa., fancier. "A year later, we both made our ring debuts at Harrisburg. He went winners dog and best of winners for 3 points. I was rather bewildered, the ring procedure being somewhat puzzling, but we both learned quickly, and Khajah finished his championship undefeated in the breed in just eight shows."

News of Dogs

Now it's an old story for the Pennsylvanian, for she has bred more than 75 titleholders.

"I was pretty busy in the early days, since I had a full-time position," said Mrs. Chambers. "I was job-estimating for an electrical contracting firm. I'd go out on jobs with architects, work all night reading the blueprints and have a bid ready in the morning."

When the Pennsylvania decided to breed Basenjis, she went at it as systematically as she did her job. She bought three brood bitches and not being too happy with the temperament and type of the dogs she had seen, purchased a stud from Seattle.

"We bred all three bitches to him," she recalled, "and had really good luck. One of the pups, Indian River First Lady, finished in a half-dozen shows in 1961. When we bred her, a daughter was winners bitch at the national specialty. For the next nine years we had the winning bitch at the national."

In 1962, Mrs. Chambers bought a 10-month-old bitch, Ch. Fulaflashi of the Congo, from Veronica Tudor-Williams, the British woman who had brought the breed out of Africa. Flash was the dam of 17 champions, including Khajah's Gay Flambeau of Ed-Jo, the sire of 58 titleholders and the nation's top Basenji stud.

However, it is Cr. Khajah's Gay Excalibur who is the fancier's pride.

"I never really campaigned a special until he came along," she said. "I was more interested in breeding than winning. But Excalibur was what I had been striving for in both type and temperament. I showed him for just one year, retiring him at Cleveland last December. He had been best Basenji 119 times, with 65 placements, including 20 firsts, and three bests. He's a double grandson of Beau and I think he will better his record as a stud, for Excalibur's only 4 years old and he's already sired 39 champions."

Since 1964, Mrs. Chambers, who never had a handling lesson, has been a professional handler. She refuses to take any more than six or eight dogs. "I can give them the personal attention that would be impossible with a large string," she said.

"I'm now handling a son of Excalibur's, who may be the greatest I've bred. He's Ch. Khajah's Gay Excelsior, and he finished three weeks ago at the age of 10 months. Watch for him!"

Penalties Sought for Davis Cup Pullouts

By NEIL AMDUR

A proposal calling for an automatic one-year suspension against any country that withdraws from the Davis Cup tennis competition for political purposes will be introduced at next year's annual meeting.

W. Harcourt Woods, the chairman of the Davis Cup Committee of Management, said yesterday the proposal was included in a newsletter mailed last week to all participating nations. Also covered in the newsletter was background information on the controversial decision by the committee to ban the Soviet Union from the 1977 draw for its refusal to play Chile in this year's semifinals.

"We need some kind of specific rule to govern these problems," Woods said by phone from his home in Short Hills, N.J. "If we're going to continue to have to deal with this kind of political stuff year after year, we might as well quit running a competition."

Woods said a similar proposal for an automatic suspension, with stiffer penalties for violations twice over a five-year period, failed by only two votes at this year's meeting in London.

"In view of the tough stance we took with the Soviets," Woods said, "I think the chances of our getting this new proposal passed next year are very good, better than 50-50. I wasn't that optimistic the last time around."

The exact phrasing of the proposal is as follows:

"Any nation whose entry has been accepted in competition shall not be permitted to withdraw after the draw has been made. Any nation contravening this regulation by conceding a walkover to an opponent at any stage of the competition shall not be eligible to compete in the ensuing competition."

Excluded from the regulation were withdrawals caused by "disasters" such as earthquakes or plane crashes.

Woods said the decision to suspend the Soviet Union for 1977 differed from previous political issues involving South Africa.

"A lot of people had sympathy with the countries protesting apartheid," Woods said, alluding to the lack of disciplinary action taken against India and Mexico for their refusal to play South Africa in previous Cup matches. "But with the Russians, this was the first blatant political meddling with a Government doing business."

The Soviet Union had pulled out of the 1976 competition to protest what it described as "the appalling crimes committed by the Chilean junta." The eight-member Committee of Management ballot banning the Soviets reportedly produced only one dissenting vo[te].

Woods said the 1976 final betw[een] Italy and Chile was still on for D[ec.] 17 through 19 in Santiago, althou[gh] he added, there have been attempts [by] Italian Communists to pressure Government into withdrawing the te[am]. The 1974 final between India and So[uth] Africa was never played after I[ndia] withdrew over the apartheid ques[tion].

Besides the Soviet Union, Kenya has drawn a one-year suspension, [ef]fective in 1978, for its refusal to [play] an early-round 1977 cup match ag[ainst] Turkey. The Kenyan protest, acco[rding] to Woods, was aimed at New Zeal[and's] presence in the draw, rather than [a] backlash against Turkey.

But a devaluation, however deep, has to be coupled with financial restraint for it to succeed. And that the Echeverría Government did not provide.

The aim of a devaluation, simply put, is to adjust the rate of domestic spending by consumers, businesses and government to a level that is sustainable without foreign borrowing beyond the nation's means.

But President Echeverría offset the corrective effect of steep devaluation by actions that tended to hamper Mexican exports and increase the flow of imports.

Domestic price controls helped to keep consumer demand high. So did sizable wage increases that offset the effect of the devaluation on the workers.

CAR SALES STEADY FOR MID-NOVEMBER, CLOSINGS ARE SET

Executives at G.M. and A.M.C. List Small-Auto Gains Because of Rebates, Price Cuts

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Nov. 24—Domestic new car sales remain essentially flat, reports today from the leading automakers for the mid-November period indicated.

Meanwhile, executives at the General Motors Corporation and the American Motors Corporation reported small-car sales gains because of the rebates and price-reduction programs on some cars.

But two G.M. plants will be shut down anyway next week to reduce inventories of the cars and A.M.C.'s small-car facilities in Wisconsin are closed this week. G.M.'s overall sales were up 9.8 percent in Nov. 11-20 but A.M.C.'s were down 28 percent.

The Ford Motor Company reported its sales off 13.2 percent for the period, attributing the drop to the effects of the recent four-week auto workers strike. Bennett E. Bidwell, sales group vice president at Ford, said "our dealers have less stock now than a month ago."

80,000 Cars in Transit"

"We had 284,000 cars on Oct. 20 and that was down to 275,000 on Nov. 20. We have 80,000 cars in transit. They are slow in arriving, so we just have not been able to make much impact on the market. I have been hoping sales would be back up by the end of November, but now it may be the first period in December."

Mr. Bidwell said dealers had only a 15-day supply of Lincolns, a 14-day supply of Continental Mark V's, and a 30-day supply of the big Ford and Mercury cars. A 60-day supply is considered normal and the stockpiles of some subcompacts is 90-120 days.

The Chrysler Corporation said sales were up one percent in the period. R. K. Brown, executive vice president for North American auto operations at Chrysler, said "there is not as much buying power in the market as we anticipated when the new model year started but we are still ahead of last year. Our compact sales are up 25 percent and our full-size Chrysler is up 18 percent. I have to fill in sales in the middle of the market."

James G. Vorhes, sales manager at G.M.'s Pontiac division, said the rebate on the company's subcompact Astre had caused "an increase in the flow of orders. It is bringing in business."

William J. Buxton, G.M. vice president for marketing, said that because of the rebates, Astre, Vega and Chevette sales in mid-November were up 46 percent from the mid-October rate.

Eugene V. Amoroso, A.M.C.'s vice president for marketing, said the Gremlin rebate "is stimulating new buyer interest in small cars and the floor traffic has increased. It appears that lower prices are the key to bringing consumers back to the low end of the market."

He said Gremlin deliveries in the first

Market Climbs, With Oil Stocks Among Leaders

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

Stock prices moved generally higher yesterday in stepped-up trading, although the Dow Jones industrial average posted only a modest gain.

Advances on the New York Stock Exchange outnumbered declines by more than a 2-to-1 ratio, with the best gains registered by the oil and special-situation issues. The Dow advanced 1.66 points to 950.96, its high for the day.

Bynum E. Vickory, vice president of investments at the Dry Dock Savings Bank, said yesterday that "investors are reappraising values of many stocks."

Noting that issues of the smaller domestic companies showed strength yesterday while the action of the larger multinational companies was for the most part unimpressive, Mr. Vickory said this was due to the multinationals' heavy dependence on foreign revenues in countries showing slower economic growth than the United States.

One favorable market factor was that mutual funds had net redemptions of $72.5 million in October, the lowest level since last December, the movement of investors away from common-stock mutual funds this year has been widely cited as a drag on stock prices since it reduces the amount of money the funds have to invest in stocks.

Yesterday's turnover on the Big Board rose to 20.42 million shares from 19.09 million shares on Tuesday. The market will be closed today in observance of Thanksgiving.

Combined trading in all issues listed on the Big Board rose to 23.86 million shares from 22.33 million shares on Tuesday.

Among the stronger oil issues, Amerada Hess gained 1 to 31¾, Superior Oil 6 to 219, Kerr-McGee 1⅝ to 71⅝, Atlantic-

U.S. JURY STUDYING TRADING IN STOCKS OF TWO SPECIALISTS

DATA OF OTHER FIRMS SOUGHT

Officials of Kingsley, Boye and Robb, Peck Have No Comment—Reports Unclear on Target of Inquiry

By LEONARD SLOANE

A Federal grand jury is investigating trading in the stocks handled by two competing specialist firms on the New York Stock Exchange, Wall Street sources disclosed yesterday.

Dozens of other firms—both wire houses that deal with the public and floor brokers that fill orders for larger firms—were served with subpoenas this week from the Justice Department, the Wall Street sources said. These firms were asked to supply information about the trades they made with the two specialists since intra-exchange competition began on Oct. 11.

It was not clear yesterday whether the inquiry was focusing on the brokerage firms or on one or both of the specialists. Eighteen securities are handled by the specialist firms, including such well-known ones as those of the Warner-Lambert Company and the Avco Corporation.

Protected Against Inroads

Specialists are exchange members who handle orders to buy and sell stocks from brokerage firms and who also purchase securities for their own accounts. Before the big Board approved the application for this type of competition—which differs from competition between New York exchange specialists and specialists on other exchanges or over-the-counter dealers—its specialists had been protected against inroads from other specialists on the same floor.

No Comment on Subpoenas

In keeping with its policy, the antitrust division of the Justice Department declined comment on the subpoenas. Officials of the two specialist firms—Kingsley, Boye & Southwood Inc. and a group headed by Robb, Peck, McCooey & Company, which also were served with subpoenas—had no comment on the report.

The subpoenas, which asked for responses next month, seek information about the communications, contacts and orders between the two specialists and the brokerage firms. Such subpoenas are called "duces tecum," defined as "give us your documents," and are normally the first step in the investigative process. If further inquiry is to be made, the Federal agency usually issues subpoenas

Justice Dept. Cites Antitrust Issue In U.S.-Soviet Accord on Shipping

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Justice Department has attacked on antitrust grounds a major, informal shipping agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union that would bring the fast-growing Russian fleet into world rate-setting conferences, it was disclosed today.

The department's comments, which undermine a Federal Maritime Commission drive to end predatory price cuts by the Russians, thereby stabilizing the shipping business, were made only this week in connection with Soviet applications last month to two key conferences.

The Maritime Commission is now considering these applications, which provide for a two-year period during which Russian participation would be phased in on special terms.

The Justice Department declared that the power Congress gave the Maritime Commission to grant antitrust exemptions to the conferences rested on the assumption that there would remain independent competition to prevent rates from moving to artificially high levels.

However, the department declared, "The proposed amendments raise a substantial likelihood that the limited independent competition which exists on the North Atlantic will be significantly decreased or eliminated through absorption into conference membership, contrary to Congressional intent."

In a telephone conversation today, a Justice Department official said that "we haven't reached any conclusion" as to whether to take formal steps to oppose probable Maritime Commission approval of the Russian applications.

He denied that an action taken today in which the department sought to prevent the commission chairman, Karl E. Bakke, from participation in the decision represented a legal wedge in such a campaign.

Department officials for some time, however, have expressed unhappiness with the anticompetitive aspects of shipping conferences and other elements of the Government are also known to be opposed to the agreement Mr. Bakke negotiated in Leningrad last summer leading to the Russian applications.

A major weapon used by Mr. Bakke was an apparently effective commission drive to sharply reduce illegal rebating by carriers, a practice the Russians said forced them to cut their rates.

T.W.A. Told to Stop 'On-Time' Ads

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (UPI)—A Civil Aeronautics Board judge ordered Trans World Airlines today to stop calling itself the "on-time airline" and to spend $1.6 million telling the public previous claims to that effect were wrong.

The order from Administrative Law Judge Ronnie A. Yoder is not a final ruling, since the full C.A.B. must make an ultimate decision on the matter. A T.W.A. spokesman said the airline disputed Mr. Yoder's findings and would ask the board to overturn them.

"T.W.A. advertising is entirely lawful and neither misleads the public nor makes any unfair representation vis-à-vis any other carrier," the spokesman said. "T.W.A. will appeal to the C.A.B. the lower judge's decision."

If the board accepts Mr. Yoder's ruling, T.W.A. will be prohibited from referring to itself as the "on-time airline" or using any similar description.

It will also have to run corrective advertisements listing all the towns where it did not have the best on-time performance during 1975, admitting that no C.A.B. records allow a system-wide comparison on time performance and stating that previous ads to the contrary were wrong.

To make such confessions, the airline would have to spend $1.6 million—6 percent of its 1975 advertising budget of almost $27 million—Mr. Yoder said.

The decision declared that T.W.A. had failed to set forth adequately the basis for claiming on-time superiority and failed to state what routes it was talking about and the percentage of time it was on time.

The complaint against the airline also alleged that it falsely claimed the C.A.B. monitored on-time performance "when the board does not in fact check or verify the figures (it receives) and those figures are filed ... by the carrier, not by the C.A.B."

It also said the airline was "asserting that on-time performance records relate to departure times when they do not" and was asserting that "T.W.A. had a better system-wide performance record than its competitors in 1975 when its record in certain markets was in fact not superior."

New Stockpile Goal Requires Purchases Totaling 6.8 Billion

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Government would be required to purchase $6.8 billion worth of metals and raw materials to meet its new objective of establishing a three-year stockpile of strategic materials, the Joint Congressional Committee on Defense Production was told today. Under the new policy, which requires adoption by Congress, the General Services Administration also would dispose of $3.9 billion worth of materials in the present stockpile, including large amounts of silver and tin.

The first cost estimates of the new policy were supplied by the General Accounting Office, which was somewhat critical of the new stockpile objectives set by the Administration.

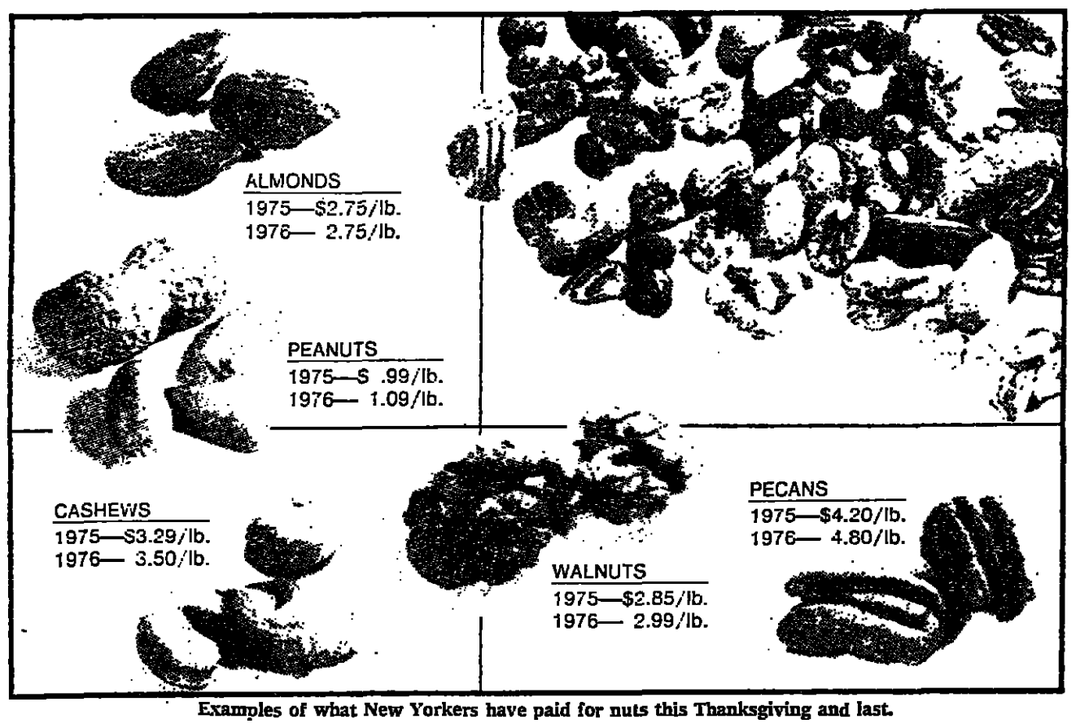
The Federal Preparedness Agency announced last month a major shift in the strategic stockpile program designed to assure a three-year supply of critical materials in event of a major war instead of the objective of a one-year supply set in 1973.

The stockpile currently consists of 93 minerals, metals and other industrial materials worth $7.4 billion. Under the new policy, requirements would be increased for 72 commodities, decreased for 12 materials and remain the same for nine.

The General Accounting Office estimated that under the new goals the stockpile would be worth about $10.3 billion, of which $3.5 billion would be met by materials already in the stockpile. Approximately $3.9 billion of materials currently in the stockpile would not be needed under the new goals, including $1.4 billion worth of tin, $500 million worth of silver and $400 million worth of tungsten.

Leslie W. Bray Jr., director of the Federal Preparedness Agency, told the committeee that, to avoid "any undue disruption of the market," the purchase of materials to meet the new goals "will probably be a long-term proposition stretching out over a number of years."

Appearing on behalf of the American Mining Congress, Simon D. Strauss, executive vice president of Asarco Inc., said that, even if the Government purchases were stretched out over several years, the new goals inevitably would lead to upward pressures on community prices.



Examples of what New Yorkers have paid for nuts this Thanksgiving and last.

People Who Crave Nuts for the Holidays Are Really Having to Shell Out This Year

By RONA CHERRY

People who went out shopping for nuts for their Thanksgiving holiday tables might have been astonished to see that some prices have soared since last year. If they were curious enough to check into the reasons behind this, they would have found that an unlikely collection of events—from turmoil in Africa to bad weather in California—all contributed to the higher prices of pecans, walnuts, cashews and other favorite nuts.

"I've never seen prices this high before," said Freda Stern, co-owner of the Broadway Nut Shop on Manhattan's West Side. "Every time we place an order with suppliers, prices have changed."

These higher prices are not expected to discourage consumers, who this year will have gobbled up an estimated 412 million pounds of the so-called "tree nuts"—walnuts, pecans and almonds, for example—plus 1.5 billion pounds of peanuts, which grow in the ground.

In the case of pecans, a crop only half the size of last year's has been harvested in states such as Georgia, Texas and Mississippi. As a result, the price has increased as much as 65 percent, with pecans now selling for up to $1 more a pound wholesale than they did last year. The Broadway Nut Shop, for example, charges $5 a pound for shelled pecans, up from $4 last year.

"Prices have gone through the roof," said Bob Webb, vice president of sales for the Funsten division of Pet Inc. which sells 65 percent of its pecans during this holiday season. "I can't believe people are buying pecans at this price."

As a result of the small pecan crop, walnuts, which are frequently substituted for pecans in baking, have also gone up in price.

"If pecan prices are higher, walnuts can afford to be higher," said a spokesman for Diamond Sunsweet Inc., a cooperative of 3,500 California farmers. "Anyway, our crop is about 4 percent smaller than last year's and demand is there, so prices for in-shell walnuts are up by about 10 to 15 percent."

About one-fourth of the walnut crop

A Difference of Investment Opinion

By ROBERT METZ

Major bank trust departments were clearly not on the same wavelength as the mutual funds in the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1976, according to figures just released in Spectrum, a publication of Computer Directions Advisers Inc., of Silver Spring, Md.

A report on 170 banks, including many of the biggest in the nation, that file quarterly reports with the Comptroller of the Currency and that have aggregate portfolio values of $129 billion clearly indicates that the banks' investment views diverged from those of mutual funds on favorite industry groups.

Almost without exception, the groups most favored by the banks were heavily sold by the mutual funds. The banks' biggest purchases on balance were petroleum refining stocks, $153 million; chemicals, $118 million; electronics, $82 million; electric utilities, $64 million, and steel, $61 million.

Meanwhile, as previously reported, the funds were big net sellers of all these groups except electric utilities in the quarter.

The funds' biggest net sales in the quarter by industry group were chemicals, $161 million; petroleum refining, $107 million; electronics, $88 million; office machines-computers, $82 million, and steel, $64 million.

The banks' biggest net sales by industry group in the quarter were printing-publishing stocks, $17 million; radio-television broadcasters, $13 million; textile mill products, $10 million; radio-television manufacturers, $8 million, and saving-and-loan companies, $7 million. Here again there was a difference of opinion between banks and mutual funds. The savings-and-loan issues were the fifth most heavily purchased group by mutual funds in the quarter.

As for individual stocks, the banks' biggest net purchases were American Telephone and Telegraph, $40 million, also a mutual-fund favorite in the period; Dow Chemical, $36 million, which the funds sold heavily; Ford, $35 million; Burroughs, $34.6 million, and International Telephone and Telegraph, $34.1 million. The funds sold Ford heavily on balance in the quarter.

The banks' biggest net sales of individual stocks were in International Business Machines, $25.6 million; General Reinsurance, $13 million; Merck, $12 million; Texaco, $9.9 million, and Heublein, $9.9 million.

Morgan Guaranty, the most conspicuous holder of I.B.M., with $1.6 billion of the stock, or 3.8 percent of the total, accounted for four-fifths of the selling in that issue in the quarter with net sales of $20.8 million.

Changes in Bank Portfolios

Top bank holdings in quarter ended Sept. 30, in millions of dollars

Stocks	Holdings	Net purchase of shares	Percent of shares outstanding
IBM	$9,618	–$25.6	22.8
Exxon	5,108	+25.1	20.6
General Motors	4,202	– 4.9	19.9
Eastman Kodak	3,385	+12.7	23.3
AT&T	2,705	+40.0	7.6
Std Oil Indiana	2,228	+26.4	27.4
General Electric	2,206	+20.1	22.1
Minnesota Mining	1,795	+10.5	24.2
Ford	1,758	+35.0	31.4
Dow	1,739	+36.0	21.1

The New York Times

Morgan's portfolio is, nevertheless, the most widely diversified of the group. The bank holds 832 stocks, compared with 821 stocks for the Bank of America, the runner-up.

The Bank of America added 33 new stocks to its holdings, more than any other bank, with First National Bank of Chicago next with 32 new purchases. The holdings reported to the Comptroller include those in which the bank holds 10,000 or more common shares. The banks hold, on average, 173 stocks.

Robert Levy, president of Computer Directions, said that the banks were clearly in a "liquidity bind." That is, they have too many shares of individual companies than they can easily sell.

"We calculate that 21 percent of individual bank holdings are in stocks in which the bank holds 5 percent or more of the shares outstanding," Mr. Levy said in a telephone interview.

One more indication of a difference of views between the banks and the mutual funds occurred among the photography concerns. The funds biggest purchase was of Polaroid, and their biggest sale was of Eastman Kodak. But the banks purchased a net $12.7 million of Eastman Kodak and sold $9 million of Polaroid on balance.

MARKET ADVANCES; OIL STOCKS STRONG

Richfield 1¼ to 58⅞. Mobil 1¼ to 59½. Exxon 1 to 51⅛. Standard Oil of Indiana ⅝ to 53⅝ and Standard Oil of Ohio 1⅛ to 78½.

In the same group, Occidental Petroleum advanced ¾ to 20 ½ as the day's most active issue on a turnover of 517,200 shares.

Analysts noted that the upswing in oil issues yesterday reflected the proposal by the Ford Administration Tuesday to eliminate controls on the price of gasoline. Gasoline, which domestically uses nearly half of all crude oil, remains the only major product under Federal controls at the retail level.

One of the larger percentage gainers was the Coastal States Gas Corporation, 1⅛ to 10 ⅛. The company said that a Texas appeals court had reversed a 1975 trial court judgment assessing $27.5 million in damages against the company's unit, the Coastal States Gas Producing company.

Prices also moved upward on the American Stock Exchange, where the market-value index rose 0.43 to 100.47 and the average price of a share gained 3 cents. Advances outpaced declines, 351 to 268, with 334 issues unchanged.

In the over-the-counter market, the NASDAQ industrial index was up 0.54 to 92.72, while the composite index added 0.47 to 90.69. Winners outscored losers by more than a 2-to-1 ratio.

On the Amex, Carbon Industries, the stock of a coal mining company, added ⅞ to 38½. International Telephone and Telegraph announced that a definitive agreement had been reached for its previously announced acquisition of Carbon Industries. Terms of the transaction call for the exchange of 0.85 share of I.T.T. cumulative preferred stock for each share of Carbon Industries common.

Circle K gained 1 to 9¼. This convenience-food store chain raised its quarterly dividend to 15 cents a share from 10½ cents and reported incerased earnings.

In options trading, 30,003 contracts traded on the Amex, down from Tuesday's 35,160. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 65,135 contracts changed hands, down from 82,185.

COLD WEATHER CUTS STOCKS OF OIL FOR HOME HEATING

The unusually cold weather over most of the nation so far this winter, pushed stocks of home-heating oil down sharply last week, the American Petroleum Institute reported yesterday.

Inventories of distillate oils dropped by nearly 6 million barrels from the week earlier and are currently running 18 million barrels below comparable figures from a year ago.

At the same time, the A.P.I. noted that the operating rate of the nation's refineries continues to mount, reflecting efforts to produce the needed fuels.

Petroleum figures, in millions of barrels, follows:

	Nov. 19, 1976	Nov. 17, 1976	Nov. 21, 1976
Gasoline production, daily	6.92	6.81	6.64

nesses from the devaluation through their foregin sales.

Thus, by penalizing exports and paying bounties on imports, as well as by assaults on business and expropriation of agricultural land, the Echeverría Government aggravated the national economy.

United States businessmen and bankers are hoping the López Government will be able to rescue the Mexican economy, but do not underestimate the tough job it faces. The International Monetary Fund, in making $1.2 billion available to Mexico, has imposed conditions for fiscal and monetary stringency designed to force down the rate of inflation. But this could increase unemployment, already a serious problem.

The López Government will also have to stop trying to counteract the effect of peso devaluation by offsetting unsustainable levels of consumption.

If the new López Government can restore financial stability, Mexico should be able to regain its high and steady rate of real economic growth.

The country has plenty of oil—enough to supply about 90 percent of its energy requirements now—and the 1973 discoveries in Chiapas and Tabasco have raised Mexico's proven reserves by 20 percent. The country is rich in minerals. Steel capacity has climbed to 10 million tons. Investment in water resources has increased the irrigated areas by a third. Fertilizers are used on half the land under cultivation, and the country can supply most of its own food requirements. And a cheaper peso will reinvigorate the tourist trade, once the current financial crisis simmers down.

But there are serious long-term problems. Mexico's population is already 62 million and growing fast. On relatively optimistic assumptions, the population will be between 110 and 120 million by the end of this century.

The economy has not been able to supply enough jobs for the 700,000 new workers entering the labor force each year.

The capital-goods industries are weak. The Echeverría Government said it wanted both foreign and domestic investment in the production of capital goods but present laws restricting foreign ownership and control to a maximum of 49 percent are discouraging to United States and other foreign investment.

The basic decision Mexico faces is whether it wants more capital investment, foreign and domestic, which is needed to put it back on a solid growth path and help create jobs for its growing labor force—or whether it prefers leftist, nationalistic ideology, disruptive not only to foreign business but also to its own.

The big New York banks are now betting that President-elect López will chose the former course—and that the peso will recover and stabilize in the year ahead.

The automobile industry is having a very good year, but the steel industry is in trouble.

The Thyssen steel works in Duisburg will shut down for two weeks at the end of the year for lack of orders, and nationwide, 943,700 men and women are without jobs.

The economic advisers' report today says that the recovery is not likely to speed up unless companies are given improved writeoff incentives to invest in new equipment and research.

Mr. Schmidt campaigned against such "gifts to industry" in this fall's national elections, but that may have been just politics.

A few days ago, he said his Government would make a decision by January on what further course to pursue.

Most of the economic recovery here has been fueled by exports, which are valued so far this year at $78 billion.

2 Big Steelmakers Raise Prices; Study Is Ordered by U.S. Agency

when steel is being sold below list raised the possibility that higher list prices are being sought in the event that the incoming Carter Administration decides to impose price and wage controls.

While other major steel companes said they were surprised by the price action, a spokesman for the Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corporation, the nation's ninth largest, said that "our instinctive reaction is that this increase is very much needed and perhaps it is only a partial step to all that is required to get earnings back to a level where they belong."

The steel industry put into effect a 6 percent increase on sheet and strip products on June 14. The initial action had been taken by Wheeling-Pittsburgh, which sought to raise prices by about 8 percent, effective June 1. After President Ford had indicated that he "was disturbed" by that move, the United States Steel Corporation, Armco and others changed the amount of the increase to 6 percent, effective June 14, and the industry went along with them.

William Lilley 3d, acting director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, said the agency was "surprised by National's decision since it does not appear that the demand for steel products is strong enough to sustain a price increase of this size." He added:

"The current situation is similar to that which existed only last August when market conditions forced the steel producers to rescind an even smaller price increase planned at that time."

But a spokesman for a competitor of National's took exception to Mr. Lilley's statement. He said:

"This is a not a similar situation. Back in August there had been more inventory accumulation than most people had thought. In the 90 or so days since then, these have been worked off."

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the No. 2 steel company, said it would have no comment at this time. The Republic Steel Corporation said "we're studying it."

A spokesman for the Armco Steel Corporation, which resisted the August price increase, said that National's action "caught us by surprise. We're studying it."

Allegheny-Ludlum Industries pointed out that it did not produce the products that were being raised by National and Jones & Laughlin, but a spokesman said: "Everybody in the industry is talking about the need to get profits in order."

Earlier this week Allegheny Ludlum's specialty steels division announced that it would raise prices by about 6 percent effective Jan. 1. Jones & Laughlin also decided yesterday to go along with the price increase.

U.S. Steel, the largest producer, which initiated the August effort to raise prices, had no comment yesterday, but on Nov. 8 Edgar B. Speer, chairman, said at a regional stockholder's meeting in Boston that his company did not foresee any steel price increases this year.

The pricing move comes at a time when steel production is at its lowest weekly level since the week ended Jan. 10. The American Iron and Steel Institute placed output for the week ended Nov. 20 at 2.21 million tons, down 4.1 percent from the preceding week. This meant that the industry was using only 72 percent of its total available production capability.

The products involved in National Steel's price changes represent about [illegible] percent of its total shipments. National insisted that the 6 percent increase covered "only partially the cost increases in materials, supplies, labor and fringes that the company has been experiencing." It added that prices of sheet products have lagged well behind the prices of other steel products in recent years.

The Wage and Price Council is at present engaged in a long-range study of metals prices, including those of the steel industry. It expects to submit results to President Ford as soon as possible.

[C]hateau Margaux is in the heart of the Médoc wine country a few miles north of Bordeaux

[By PAUL]E H. FARNSWORTH

[MARGAUX,] France—The colonnade slopes gently from the [a]cres of vineyards culti[vated in the d]ays of knights and hal[berds... stretch]ings round towards a [...]e neo-palladian chateau [...] calls home.

[...] a lone worker dressed [in] coveralls hunches over [the v]ines, diligently cropping [the] next growth of some of [the most not]able grapes in the world. [...]ars the name of the cha[teau ... ga]ve the name to the vil[lage ... in the Mé]doc wine country a few [miles north of] Bordeaux.

[...]es of Chateau Margaux [are amo]ng the most famous and [... t]he world since they re[ceived] recognition from the [...]ment at an exposition in [...] Bottles from mediocre [... f]or at least $10 each in [...]tes, and a Chateau Mar[gaux of a g]reat vintage, for exam[ple,] costs $100 or more at

[...]s Sensitive Chord

[...] five Bordeaux wines es[...]y to be classified as pre[mier c]ru. Chateau Margaux is [...] many in this village of [... a]pparently by the Govern[ment]s as well, as something [of the stat]ude of a national monu[ment like] the Eiffel Tower or the [...] in the Louvre.

[...]ched a particularly sen[sitive chord ...]ere when Mr. Ginestet, [w]ho inherited the chateau [from his father] Fernand, negotiated its [sale to N]ational Distillers and [Chemical Corp]oration of the United [States for $16 m]illion.

[As An]dré Illouz, proprietor of the village cafe, put it, "many of us thought it right for the Government to intervene (the sale was blocked last August)—after all, Chateau Margaux should stay French."

Guy Fernandes, a worker at another local vineyard, owned by a British brewery, added: "We have nothing against foreigners. But Chateau Margaux is one of the last remaining great vineyards still in French hands."

Of the other four distinguished premier grand crus, which means first great growths, Chateau Haut Brion was sold to the Clarence Dillon banking family in the United States in the late 1930's, Chateau Latour was acquired by the British Cowdray-Pearson group in 1963, and both Chateau Mouton Rothschild and Chateau Lafite are owned by branches of the Rothschild banking family.

The French Government reacted to the proposed sale to National Distillers not too differently from the way the United States Government has reacted when Middle East investors sought to acquire the Lockheed and Grumman aircraft concerns.

In devising what Paris authorities call "the French solution," the Government got one of the big state-owned banks, Crédit Agricole, to make a bid—but for a good deal less ($4 million) than what National Distillers' management was willing to pay.

Mr. Ginestet's son Bernard sniffs the heady bouquet of a glass of 1971 Chateau Margaux, lights up a Gitane cigarette and announces that the family has decided to sell the vineyard "by the end of the year at the latest."

Father and son make no secret of the fact that they are in financial trouble—trouble that bears no real relation to the Chateau Margaux vineyard.

They also own a wine-dealing establishment, one of the most important in Bordeaux, and took a financial beating in their trading activities when the bottom fell out of the Bordeaux wine market three years ago.

In the preceding wine-boom years speculation had driven prices sharply higher, and anticipating that the trend would last, the Ginestets signed long-term contracts with local vintners at prices that turned out to be much higher than the wine could be sold for in the collapsing market.

The family honored all its contracts, but at the same time accumulated debts that Bernard says totaled $10 million.

Rise in Productivity Slowed in 3d Quarter

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The rise in productivity, or output per hour worked, in the nonfinancial corporate sector of the economy slowed markedly in the third quarter, the Labor Department reported today.

Productivity was up 2.5 percent, only about half as much as the quarterly average for the first half of the year. However, the rise in hourly compensation of labor slowed somewhat in the third quarter, with the result that unit labor costs, up 3.7 per cent, rose a little more than the 3.1 percent increase in the second quarter.

For the first three quarters of the year the rise in unit labor costs in the corporate sector averaged 3.7 percent, as productivity increases offset much of the rise in wages.

NORTHERN LIFE SALE IS STUDIED BY ORION

Action Would Free the Successor to Equity Funding Company of $30 Million in Bank Debt

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

The Orion Capital Corporation of Parsippany, N.J., said yesterday that the company might sell the Northern Life Insurance Company of Seattle, one of its principal assets.

Merger News

Alan R. Gruber, chairman of Orion, which is the successor to the bankrupt Equity Funding Company, said Orion was considering the sale of Northern Insurance despite its good performance and prospects.

The sale, it was indicated, would enable Orion to free itself of about $30 million in bank debt. Mr. Gruber said Orion would expect any purchaser to pay cash in an amount approximating Northern's book value, which was $51.6 million on Sept. 30, 1976.

Mr. Gruber disclosed that the brokerage firm of Shearson Hayden Stone Inc. had advised him that it had purchased 490,000 shares of Orion Capital stock in the open market and was in the process of preparing necessary filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Orion Capital has about 7.92 million shares outstanding.

Mr. Gruber said he had met with the chief executive officer of Shearson to discuss the possibility of some combination of the two companies, but nothing had developed to a point to believe that a definitive proposal would be forthcoming and there were no plans for further meetings with Shearson's management.

Orion Capital on March 31, 1976, took over the assets of Equity Funding, which two years ago was involved in an insurance fraud scandal. The assets consisted primarily of the Bankers National Life Insurance Company of Parsippany and the Northern Life Insurance Company.

Cadillac Fairview Raises Offer for Irvine Co.

The Cadillac Fairview Corporation of Toronto said it had increased its offer to purchase all of the outstanding shares of the Irvine Company, a California land development company, to a total of $283,987,500 in cash and notes.

The company's previous offer, which had been competitive with one from the Mobil Corporation, was $279.8 million.

Dollar Shows Gain As Gold Price Dips For the 2d Session

LONDON, Nov. 24 (AP)—The dollar had a good day on European foreign exchanges today while the price of gold slipped back for the second consecutive trading session.

Dealers found no obvious reason for the dollar's improvement after losing ground yesterday amid concern over President-elect Jimmy Carter's economic aims.

Across Europe, the dollar closed up against the West German mark at 2.4075, compared with 2.4005 yesterday; up about 1¼ centimes at 2.4475 Swiss francs, against 2.4323. It closed against the French franc at 4.9905, compared with 4.9835, and at 2.5040 Dutch guilders, up .010.

The British pound had a quieter day after a loss of 4 cents earlier in the week. It closed at $1.6460, compared with $1.6440 yesterday.

Gold bullion, which brought about $140 an ounce in Europe early last week, closed lower in Zurich, London and Milan.

In Zurich, the Continent's biggest market, the metal closed at $131, down $2.75 from yesterday's close. The London closing price was $131.125, down from $132.50. In Milan, bullion closed at $132 an ounce, down $2.

ALEXANDER'S NET IS DOWN 25% IN FISCAL QUARTER

Alexander's Inc., a leading New York area retailer, told its shareholders at the annual meeting in Paramus, N. J., yesterday that its net profit in the first fiscal quarter ended Oct. 23 declined about 25 percent from the year-earlier level.

Net earnings were $1,151,000, or 25 cents a share, compared with $1,402,000, or 31 cents a share, in the like 1975 quarter. Sales rose to $89 million from $80.2 million. "The nationwide lag in consumer demand continued into August and September, making higher promotional costs necessary in order to stimulate sales," Alexander Farkas, president, told the shareholders.

The company's directors declared a yearend dividend of 30 cent a share, payable Feb. 9, 1977 to shareholders of record Jan. 17.

Complaint Backlog at Job Agency

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which has been criticized and, at times, ridiculed for its vast and growing backlog of complaints, decided this summer what to do about it. It would simply spend less time dealing with the complaints, and, in business parlance, "write down" many of the oldest complaints, which more than likely had been made moot by the passage of time anyway.

With the backlog of about 124,000 cases, built up over the years, the acting chairman, Ethel Bent Walsh, told the commission staff and field force to try to close out 12,000 of the oldest cases, namely those that had been filed before July 1, 1973.

Last week, the commission announced that it had outdone itself. During the three-month "transition quarter"—Washington jargon for the three months added to the fiscal year so as to make it henceforth conclude in October rather than July—E.E.O.C. closed out 20,000 cases.

That accomplishment, Mrs. Walsh announced, "exceeded all expectations."

Barry Goldstein, a lawyer for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund here, had another opinion. "So what? Anybody can throw complaints in the trash basket," he said.

It turned out that not exactly all of the 12,000 pre-July 1973 complaints were closed out. About 9,500 were resolved, 1,000 have been "investigated and decided and are awaiting conciliation or closure," and 1,400 simply could not be handled under the stepped-up procedures.

The aim of the program was not to throw the complaints directly into the waste basket. The idea was to make immediate efforts to locate the complaining employees to see whether they continued to be interested in pressing their complaints.

Even as they framed their expedited procedures, the commissioners knew that thousands of complainants would not respond to the notices from E.E.O.C. in the specified 10-day period because they would have moved, lost interest or their nerve, found a better job or made peace with their employer.

The commission gave no figures, but presumably the number of complainants who disqualified themselves from further consideration exceeded expectations. They figured that 3,000 to 4,000 would fall into that category.

In a memorandum to the commission several weeks after the announcement of the expedited procedures, Mr. Goldstein complained that the 10-day period for response to the E.E.O.C. was "unnecessarily short." He said that this was especially true when the letter was sent in August, a month when people are on vacation.

He also made the point without changing any minds, that since the processing delay was attributable to E.E.O.C. inefficiency and not the fault of the complainant, the least the commission could do was to make some effort to find the complaining party.

To save time, the commission said in August that it would send form letters, not the customary detailed explanations, to complainants found to have no basis for complaint about being turned down for a job or for failing to obtain some benefit on the job.

However, full explanations continue to be sent to employers or unions against whom complaints are made, inevitably laying the commission open to charge that it appears more concerned about relations with the subjects of complaint than with the individuals whose rights supposedly are protected by the law.

Mr. Goldstein and other civil rights lawyers fear that evidence will soon show that the E.E.O.C. will increase its tendency to find "no cause" for complaint, largely because of the shortened periods of investigation and the tacit pressure to get cases determined.

"In many cases where previously the E.E.O.C. would have found 'cause' after a substantial investigation, there will now be findings of 'no cause'," he said in his memorandum to Mrs. Walsh.

The findings of no cause will be damaging to the interests of people who feel harmed, he said, because private lawyers are unlikely to take the case. There should be some indication that the finding was made under the hurry-up procedures rather than the more deliberate procedures that contributed to the backup complaints.

One of the long-term consequences of the new procedures, especially if they are extended to post-1973 complaints, could be some reduction in class actions by the commission.

In the past, much to the consternation of corporate personnel officers, commission investigators would keep an eye out for evidence of broad cases in a plant while researching an individual complaint.

As they investigate the old cases, the staff has been told not to bring up marginal issues or spend time trying to develop cases that show patterns of abuse against women or minorities.

The pressure on the E.E.O.C. staff has not eased, largely because at best only a small step has been taken toward erasing the big backlog. The all-out effort in July, August and September resulting in the disposition of 20,000 cases led to a net reduction of just 2,000 in the backlog.

The backlog of 124,00 had been cut to 122,000 by Oct. 1, the commission said this week.

Liggett Says Questionable Deals Of Subsidiaries Weren't Illegal

The Liggett Group Inc. of Durham, N.C., announced yesterday that it had reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission results of an investigation that uncovered questionable foreign payments by subsidiaries, as well as gratuities and rebates totaling $252,000 from Jan. 1, 1971, to Sept. 30, 1976. The company produces cigarettes, alcoholic beverages and food.

No identification was made of the subsidiaries involved or of the recipients of the payments and gratuities, which included employees or entities of four unnamed foreign governments. The company said that the investigation disclosed no illegal foreign or domestic political contributions, no maintenance of "off-book" or "slush" funds and no illegal payments to Federal, state or local government employees.

In another report to the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Allied Chemical Corporation said that its investigations of possible improper payments ove the last five years revealed no illegal or questionable political contributions in the United States with the possible exception of a few incidents in which local plant personnel spent insignificant amounts to buy tickets for fund-raising dinners.

Stromberg-Carlson To Reduce Employment

The Stromberg-Carlson Corporation, a subsidiary of the General Dynamics Corporation, announced that, effective Jan. 1, it planned to reduce employment at its headquarters plant in Rochester by 200 persons.

The company also said that with the sale of its Crossreed Switch line to an unidentified Chicago company, there would be a further loss of 40 jobs.

Penney Catalogue Center Planned in Connecticut

The J. C. Penney Company said that it planned to build a catalogue distribution center in a 400-acre industrial park that is being developed by the town of Manchester, Conn.

The company said that it expected to build the two-million-square-foot center on a 150-acre site in the park. It noted, however, that the plans were contingent on the town's being able to develop the industrial park on a schedule that would enable the center to open in mid-1980.

Routes Recommended For Flying Tiger Line

The Flying Tiger Line has been recommended for operation of new all-cargo routes between the United States and Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia. The recommendation, made by a Civil Aeronautics Board law judge, must be approved by the full C.A.B. and the White House.

In addition to an authorization of the new routes for five years, the recommendation proposed an indefinite extension of authorization for the airline's current routes to Japan, South Korea, the Philippines, Taiwan and Okinawa. Flying Tiger also has authority for routes to Thailand and Vietnam but has suspended service on them.

As a result, consumers shopping for cocktail peanuts in A.&P. stores in the metropolitan area are paying $1.25 for 12 ounces of the nuts, compared with 79 cents last year.

Almonds a Bright Spot

One bright spot in the nut picture involves almonds, which have remained relatively stable in price, or in some cases have even declined. Department of Agriculture officials note that the size of the almond crop has sharply increased. A harvest of some 470 million pounds of almonds was expected in this crop year, which ended Sept. 30, up from 320 million pounds last year.

A spokesman for the California Almond Growers, a cooperative of about 4,700 farmers, said prices were down only slightly because "in excess of half" the almond crop will be exported.

"We have a surplus as far as domestic consumption is concerned," said Chris Mantikos, a spokesman for the cooperative. "And we have a good export market in areas such as Germany and Japan."

Despite the higher prices, those in the nut business assert they are not really worried about sales to consumers. "There's resistance at first," said Seymour Stern of the Broadway Nut Shop. "But very often people come back because they realize the prices of everything have gone up. If you want the merchandise you buy it."

NEW-CAR SALES STEADY DURING MID-NOVEMBER

20 days of November were up 25 percent from the corrsponding period in Oct.

Overall sales for the Nov. 1-20 period remained at the same 8 million rate as in the first 10 days. Nov. 11-20 sales of 254,898 were up 0.8 percent from 252,942 last year. The daily selling rate for the Nov. 1-20 period of 26,405 was off 0.6 percent from 26,581 last year.

Ward's automotive reports said an analysis of mid-November sales showed subcompacts accounted for 12.10 percent, compacts for 23.73, vans for 1.04, intermediates for 33.11 and full-size cars for 30.02 percent.

Ward said the industry was scheduled to build 112,924 cars this week, down 41 percent from the 191,231 cars built last week as a result of closings for the Thanksgiving Day holiday. But output will be 13.6 percent ahead of the 99,374 cars built in the comparable week last year.

G.M. Sets Closings

G.M. said it would close its Wilmington, Delaware Chevette plant next week as well as its Lordstown, Ohio Vega and Astre plant.

Chrysler said it would close the same week of Dec. 6 its motorhome chassis line in suburban Warren and that it also had laid off 170 workers at its car export-packing plant near Detroit.

11-20	1976	1975
G.M.	153,843	140,173
Ford	60,709	69,924

REDEMPTIONS IN OCTOBER OF MUTUAL FUNDS DOWN

Net redemptions of mutual fund shares in October were the lowest since December 1975 as sales exceeded redemptions by $72 million, compared with September's excess of $234.4 million, the Investment Company Institute reported yesterday.

Total sales of fund shares, other than money market funds, were $378.1 million, the highest since last January. Redemptions of fund shares fell to $450 million in October from $572.8 million in September, the institute reported.

Total net assets for mutual funds at the end of October were $44.9 billion, a 2.6 percent drop from September's value of $46.1 billion, but a 7.2 percent increase over a year ago, when assets amounted to $41.9 billion.

Total portfolio purchases by the funds were $1.1 billion October and portfolio sales were $1.22 billion, the institute said. Purchases of common stock amounted to $612.2 million, compared with sales of common stock of $946.6 million.

Iced broilers closed little changed while soybean oil gained some 25 points and meal closed uneven.

At the close, soybeans were 3½ to 7 cents a bushel higher, with January at $6.81; wheat was ¼ cent lower to ½ cent higher, with December at $2.61½; corn was 1 cent lower to ½ cent higher, with December at $2.44, and oats were ¼ cent to 1 cent higher, with December at $1.54½.

U.S. JURY STUDIES DATA ON SPECIALISTS' TRADES

"ad testificandum," requesting personal testimony.

Before last month, the specialist for these 14 common stocks, three preferred stocks and one warrant had been Kingsley, Boye. But this company instituted a discount brokerage business last summer that deals with the public, in addition to its specialist activities.

Many major brokerage firms were apparently angered by this action by Kingsley, Boye and some of them began giving their orders to three independent, or "$2," brokers that spent the day near the Kingsley, Boye specialists at Post 21 on the exchange floor.

The three brokers—Peter J. Bergen, Kevin Reilly and Richard Timothy—then formed a joint account with Robb, Peck and applied to the exchange board of directors for the right to specialize in the same securities as Kingsley Boye. The Big Board approved this request and the formal competition soon began, with Kingsley, Boye and Robbi, Peck specialists standing next to each other and making markets.

S.E.C. STUDYING CONDUCT OF GAMBLE-SKOGMO CHIEF

Special to The New York Times

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 24—The Securities and Exchange Commission has initiated an inquiry into questions raised about the conduct of Bertin C. Gamble, chairman and chief executive officer of Gamble-Skogmo Inc., according to sources close to the situation.

The study, being handled out of the S.E.C.'s Chicago office, is likely to take several weeks and is expected to include lengthy interviews with principals in the matter, the sources said. The Chicago office of the S.E.C. has refused to comment on the case.

Two former directors of Gamble — one was also the chairman of the board's audit committee until he resigned in a dispute with Mr. Gamble earlier this month—had sent a letter to the S.E.C. outlinging "concerns" they had about the chairman.

Those included the possibility that Mr. Gamble was talking with an Arab consortium about selling the company, that the chairman might be seeking to profit personally from such a tender offer and that an attempt was under way to dispose of a major subsidiary, Alden's. Mr. Gamble has denied any inpropriety.

OFFICIALS OFFER WAY TO PAY NOTEHOLDERS

ings the city achieved would be used to forestall further city layoffs. The reaction of the city's banks was generally hostile.

Should the banks and the pension funds agree to this part of the plan—and spokesmen for both groups refused to comment on this yesterday—there would be no possibility of using all of the $175 million to prevent layoffs.

City officials explained that part of this money would have to be used to ease the new burden of debt service that would result from a new $1 billion issue of M.A.C. bonds.

Mr. Gotbaum reported that the two-hour meeting at Gracie Mansion included a discussion "of the general perimeters" of the problem as well as the labor leaders' view of their proper role and what the resolution of this latest problem should be.

"We said in a very nice way, 'Don't discuss our participation without our participation,'" Mr. Gotbaum said. Then he elaborated: "Don't call us like we're your rich cousins—that was the big point we wanted to get across."

One participant speculated that city officials were ruling out new Federal assistance to help provide $1 billion to pay off the short-term notes to put added pressure on the banks and pension funds to make additional investments in M.A.C. bonds.

If this strategy failed, the city would then be able to request new Federal assistance from the Carter Administration by saying that all efforts to solve the problem on the local level had been exhausted.

New York State's budget problems represent yet another element that could throw the city's financial calculations into disarray. The possibility of a cut in local assistance stemming from these problems was raised by labor leaders in the morning, and by city officials briefing leading bankers in the afternoon at the New York City Clearinghouse Association's headquarters downtown.

Meanwhile, Mr. Richenthal, the attorney for the Flushing National Bank, said he had talked with Mr. Rohatyn several times by telephone yesterday. Tomorrow, he will join Mayor Beame and Mr. Rohatyn for their first tripartite negotiating session—over lunch.

Rome Airport Closed a Night

ROME, Nov. 24 (UPI)—Rome's Leonardo da Vinci International Airport will be closed from nightfall tomorrow to dawn Friday because of threats by strikers to switch off runway lights, the airport director, Raffaele Casagrande, said today.

Invalidation of Moratorium on New York City Notes Is Called Dawn of New Re[...]

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

Like a thunderclap, the State Court of Appeals decision invalidating the moratorium on the payment of $1 billion in short-term New York City notes sent all the participants in the city's long-running fiscal drama scrambling for cover in different directions in the last week. Suddenly, the elaborate structure that has kept the city solvent for more than a year seemed shaky as it had not been since the height of the fiscal crisis. Only one thing appeared clear as a result of the startling reversal in the state's highest court: A new reality had descended on the city's financial picture, giving its problems greater urgency and insuring that the solutions would be more complicated than ever.

News Analysis

Many lawyers who read the decision's assertion that noteholders were "not entitled" to payment until it could be arranged not to be "unnecessarily disruptive" of the city's finances said that the effect of the Court of Appeals action was to bring about a sort of judicial moratorium in place of the legislative moratorium it had so roundly denounced.

Just how long this judicial moratorium is to last is the subject of negotiations now involving the city, the state, the Municipal Assistance Corporation and a new player to the melodrama—the man who has come to represent perhaps thousands of anonymous owners of the short-term notes—Arthur Richenthal, the lawyer for Flushing National Bank. The bank was the plaintiff in the moratorium suit.

A $1 Billion Problem

The Court of Appeals decision presents the city with a $1 billion problem that can be conceived of in two parts: First, where is the city going to borrow the money long term to pay back the notes in the short term, and second, if the city can borrow the $1 billion long term, how is it going to pay this sum back over the next several years without taking on a crushing debt service burden that exacerbates its already deficit-ridden budget?

Both parts are intertwined with city, state and national politics, in the sense that the first instinct of the advisers to Mayor Beame and Governor Carey had been to turn to Washington for assistance, specifically to call in some of the political debts owed by President-elect Jimmy Carter because of the plurality he won in the state Nov. 2.

That was their first instinct, but it soon became apparent that it might be possible to raise the $1 billion from local sources—or at least worth the try to do so, in the view of a Governor and Mayor who were less than eager to rush off to Washington before exploring their own options first.

Thus the architects of the city rescue, led by Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, are now turning once more to the sources of money that have kept the city afloat from the beginning: the major New York City banks, members of the New York Clearing House Association; the municipal employee pension funds, and the investing community at large, which earlier this month bought $250 million in M.A.C. bonds in a surprisingly successful public sale.

The aim of Mr. Rohatyn was to persuade Mr. Richenthal, representing the noteholders, to settle his suit by accepting a compromise consisting partly of long-term bonds and partly of cash—with the cash to be raised, in turn, by the sale of bonds to the banks, the pension systems and the public.

In effect, the city is seeking in one extremely complicated motion to convert $1 billion in outstanding short-term notes into $1 billion in long-term bonds that can be paid off over the next several years.

Although many people dismiss the entire effort as a charade—a superficially good-faith play for sympathy from Washington—there are others who feel that Mr. Rohatyn and his financial wizards have a chance to succeed, despite the obstacles.

The main obstacles are that the banks and the pension funds are already bulging with city, state and M.A.C. securities and are therefore likely to resist having to absorb more. But in both cases they might be persuaded to do so, given some assurance that their moves would help rid the city once and for all of the problem created by the $1 billion in notes that had always been hanging over its head, to the detriment of its general credit standing.

Even if the city and state map their strategy to put pressure on the banks, the pension funds and Mr. Richenthal, there is talk about creating a new sort of bond that might be more attractive to them than either city or M.A.C. bonds are at present.

For instance, the M.A.C. could issue a bond and then use the proceeds to take the unusual step of buying a city bond. In effect, the M.A.C. bond—which is already backed by a reserve of the city's sales and stock transfer taxes—would then also be backed by real estate taxes, which are traditionally used to pay off city bonds.

A 'Super-M.A.C.' Possible

The result: a sort of "super-M.A.C." bond that would have the credit of the city's stock transfer, sales and real estate taxes behind it. It is thought by some that Mr. Richenthal might be more willing to accept "super-M.A.C." instead of M.A.C. bonds or city bonds, as payment for the note holders—thereby easing the pressure to issue bonds to the banks or the pension funds.

"It's a 'big M.A.C.' bond with special sauce, onions, lettuce and cheese on a sesame seed bun," said one man involved in the process.

There is a problem with simply transforming the city's bulge of short-term notes into a bulge of long-time bonds, however: the tremendous burden of additional debt service payments needed to retire the bonds over a period of the next several years.

City financial experts are concerned that the debt service on $1 billion in bonds would either force the real estate tax up or force the need for further budget cuts, at a time when the city can ill afford either.

Goldin Computing Debt Service

As a result, the office of City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin is doing a comprehensive computer calculation of long-range debt service burdens expected to be incurred by the city's present schedule of long-term borrowing over the next 10 years. His aides have found, on a preliminary basis, that the debt service burden may actually be tapering off in the next few years because the city will not be doing as much borrowing as it has in the past.

The new bonds that would be issued are therefore being constructed in such a way as to keep the debt service burden relatively stable over the years, and therefore keep the real estate tax—which is pegged to the cost of debt service for city bonds—relatively stable, as well.

The main focus of these efforts is on the fiscal year that begins next July 1—the third and final year of the city's timetable to balance its budget, when it must achieve new savings to close a half-billion-dollar deficit.

Traditionally, in the case of bonds, the first payment of principal can be postponed until 18 months after the bond is issued. If the bonds are [...] Jan. 1, in other words, there [...] have to be any payment of [...] the $1 billion in bonds conv[...] the notes.

Lee A. Iacocca, president of the Ford Motor Company, spoke of "a drastic decline" in industrial support for research needed to provide the technological basis required to keep the United States competitive in world markets.

While part of the decline is a product of the depressed economy, he said, a "substantial and increasing proportion" of the research effort is being diverted to cope with Federal and Congressional regulations. Some of these are aimed at legitimate environmental and safety concerns, he said, but others are "excessive."

Dr. Baker believes that national regulation is necessary where "macrosystems" are involved. These are situations in which diverse factors, touching many elements of society, are concerned. He cited as examples the environment, health care, safety, conservation, energy and communications.

Areas of Disagreement

Among areas of disagreement that emerged at the Washington meeting was the role of public disenchantment with science and scientists as well as with technology and those who apply it. Dr. Ramo listed an "antitechnology bias" as one of the major impediments to progress. Many people, he said, "equate technological advances with the devil."

They argue that new technologies have cost much and yielded little, citing pollution, pesticides and nuclear threats from reactors and bombs. They thus confuse invention with misapplication, he asserted.

The "flawed image of the scientist," Dr. Ramo added, has developed as scientists on both sides of public issues "flaunt the fact they are scientists even when making personal value judgments." The public, he said, has therefore adopted one of three attitudes.

One group does not trust anyone in private enterprise and wants pervasive government control. Another finds the government and its influence overgrown and would curtail it. The third school believes in both these arguments and has become "totally negative," Dr. Ramo said.

Dissenters State Views

Dissenters from this view at the academy meeting cited surveys indicating that science and scientists may not be so poorly regarded. The National Science Board report examined a number of polls on this question. While the results were not unequivocal, the National Science Board said:

"Perhaps the clearest conclusion is that there has been a general drop in the public's esteem for public institutions generally since the middle-1960's. In absolute terms scientists have shared in this drop, but in comparison with other professionals they have held their own or even gained.

"The public," it continued, "also has a high degree of respect for scientists as experts entitled to take part in public policy decisions. Young people seem to be especially sensitive to the possible negative consequences of technology, but it does not appear that they have become generally disaffected with either science or technology."

Dr. Ramo offered what might be regarded as a radical funding policy for basic research. Rather than allocating fixed sums to specific areas of inquiry it would fund anyone with a top-notch project.

This would not mean a "blank check" that would produce unlimited doctoral candidates, he said, but in a decade or two it would produce more scientists, "more innovation and more creativity."

He argued as well that funding should be more stable and long-term instead of the most distinguished researchers having to start in the fall preparing to make their appeal six months later for renewed support.

Peers Could Be Brakes

Dr. Ramo felt confidence that "peer judgment," whereby the efforts of one scientist are judged by his peers, would serve as an effective brake on such open-ended funding.

He cited a recent comment by Dr. J. Herbert Hollomon of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology that basic research needed to improve methods in engineering had become dangerously weak. As others at the meeting put it, corporate emphasis new is on research aimed at a "quick profit."

The reason offered by Dr. Ramo was that, in view of inflation and other uncertainties, the big corporations cannot see far enough ahead to undertake long-term research. Where research and development is very costly and expected profit margins uncertain, government and industry must work together, he said.

As an example he cited the development of methods to derive liquid or gaseous fuel from coal, which he feels should be a prime national goal in view of dwindling oil supplies. The proposal to guarantee loans to industries joining in this effort was turned down by Congress.

Some voted against it as a "give-away" to big business, Dr. Ramo said, whereas others opposed it as "socialistic" because government would allegedly gain control over private industry. "We have in the United States," he added, a very severe "mismatch" between technological promise and social capabilities.

The "arrangement making," he asserted, is far more difficult than the science and technology. "Here is an opportunity for professional activity that is missing in the nation," he said. "We ought to realize we are a hybrid society"—not all free enterprise, not all government control.

And, he said, "we ought to try to create a professional class to deal with those problems."

American scientists took pride a few weeks ago in the awarding of all this year's Nobel Prizes in the various sciences to American colleagues. But last week's discussions in Washington revealed a deep-seated uneasiness that those prizes reflected achievements in education and research of by-gone years, when the atmosphere may have been more conducive to innovation.

With a new administration about to ttake office, led by a trained engineer, participants in last week's meeting were agreed that ways should be explored to inject new vigor into academic, corporate and government research. They were not, however, unanimous on how to go about it.

Research & Development as a percent of Gross National Product: 1960-76

The New York Times/Nov. 25, 1976

According to an analysis by the National Science Foundation, the Federal contribution to research and development, as a percentage of gross national product, has declined steadily over the last 10 years. The non-Federal contribution has remained almost steady at 1.1 percent of the G.N.P. while the Federal share has fallen from 2 percent in 1964 to 1.2 percent in 1976.

Spending for basic research, in terms of constant dollars, declined at an average annual rate of 0.9 percent from 1967 through 1975. The projected expenditure of $4.8 billion in this category during 1976 would represent a 1 percent increase in constant dollars.

Total research and development spending this year is expected to be $38.1 billion, of which defense and space budgets account for 36 percent. Defense alone represents more than a quarter of the total. Federal spending for research and development in such fields as health, energy and environment is 17 percent. Non-Federal spending makes up the remaining 47 percent.

2 VIKING CRAFT TAKE THE HOLIDAY OFF, TOO

Already Spotty Communications Are All Blacked Out Because Sun Is Right Between Mars and Earth

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD

Thanksgiving, it so happens, will be a day of quiet for the Viking spacecraft on and around Mars. The motions of the planets have reached a point at which the sun today is directly between Mars and Earth, an alignment known as solar conjunction that produces a blackout of Viking-to-Earth communications.

This marks the end of the normal missions of Vikings 1 and 2 and the beginning of the "extended" missions that, it is hoped, will permit scientific observations through an entire Martian year of 25 months.

Viking 1 deployed a landing craft to the surface on July 20, and Viking 2, on Sept. 3. Both landers and both orbiting vehicles were reported yesterday by flights controllers at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., to be in good condition for the extended operations.

They were, at least, the last time they were heard from.

Disruption and Confusion

For weeks, as Mars moved closer and closer to conjunction, solar interference increasingly disrupted radio signals to and from the spacecraft. The static caused a growing number of errors in the transmitted data.

This led flight controllers to command the spacecraft two weeks ago to suspend transmissions of all but certain "housekeeping" information, the status reports of essential systems. A minimum of scientific data, including the results of ongoing tests in search of Martian life, were being recorded on board the spacecraft for later transmission.

All communications with the orbiters were lost on Monday and with the landers on Tuesday, the flight controllers said. An attempt to reacquire signals from the spacecraft will be made at the end of the week, after Mars re-emerges from behind the sun.

For some Viking Project scientists, however, the solar conjunction provided a rare opportunity to study the sun's upper, rarefied atmosphere, or corona, and to obtain more refined measurements confirming a point in Einstein's theory of general relativity.

These experiments were conducted, just before the communications blackout, by the Viking radio science team, led by William H. Michael of the Langley Research Center at Hampton, Va. Langley is the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's center in charge of the Viking Project.

Signals in Passage Important

The experiment depended not on the messages carried by the radio signals but on the signals themselves, particularly on what happens to them as they pass from the spacecraft through the gravitational and atmospheric fields of the sun.

Changes in the frequency, amplitude and phase of the spacecraft signals will be analyzed by scientists to learn more about the density, extent and electron content of the solar corona. The corona is visible from Earth only during a total solar eclipse, when it shows up as the bright glow around the darkened sun.

For the Einstein test the scientists timed the radio signals as Mars moved toward its alignment with the sun. According to the theory of general relativity, the light beam from a star to Earth, or a radio wave, will be affected by the gravitational attraction of the sun. If a signal passes particularly close to the sun, its arrival time on Earth should be delayed slightly, perhaps 200 or so microseconds.

Though such experiments have been done in the past, with the earlier Mariner planetary probes, and Einstein's theory presumably confirmed, Mr. Michael said that the Viking tests should measure the time-delay effect to an accuracy of one-tenth of one percent of the total effect. This, he said, would be the most accurate measurement thus far, primarily because the positions and distance of the Viking spacecraft have been more accurately plotted.

A return to full post-conjunction operations of the Viking spacecraft is expected by mid-December, according to G. Calvin Broome, the new project manager. He succeeds James S. Martin, Jr., who resigned last month for an executive position in the aerospace industry.

If the spacecraft systems survive the blackout and the relative inactivity, a nmber of experiments are planned. These will include taking more photographs of the Martian surface, monitoring for seismic events, (none have been observed thus far), observing the planet's daily and seasonal weather changes and scooping up more soil samples for life-detection tests.

In February, Mr. Broome said, that the Viking 1 orbiter will be directed to make a close approach to Phobos, one of the two tiny Martian satellites. While the spacecraft is passing within 30 miles of Phobos, its cameras are expected to take the most detailed pictures yet, with resolutions down to about 6 to 10 feet, and also gather gravitational and thermal data.

A similar reconnaissance of Deimos, the other Martian moon, is planned late next year.

Plan for Midtown Copter Flights Is Debated

By GLENN FOWLER

The proposed resumption of helicopter service at the Pan Am Building after a lapse of nearly nine years was pictured alternately at a hearing yesterday as a boon to the city's economy and a noisy hazard to residents and businesses in the Grand Central area.

Members of the City Planning Commission indicated that they would reach a decision next week on an application by New York Airways for permission to restore scheduled service between the building's roof, 59 stories above East 45th Street, and the three major New York airports.

Approval by the Board of Estimate would also be required for the flights, which were discontinued in February 1968 after 26 months of service because the small Boeing Vetol helicopters then in use made the operation uneconomical.

New 30-passenger Sikorsky S-61 craft would be used in the restored service. A parade of airline officials and consultants went before the City Planning Commission yesterday to testify that the S-61 was substantially quieter than its predecessor and that helicopters had compiled an impressive safety record.

The Opposition Speaks To

A score of residents from the area and spokesmen for community groups disputed these contentions. William E. Curtis, president of the Turtle Bay Association, urged that helicopter takeoffs and landings be confined to riverfront sites, as they are now.

Commission members questioned supporters of the heliport closely on the safety issue. Martin Conway, a pilot for New York Airways, testified that a disabled S-61 helicopter with both engines out of operation could glide on its rotor blades to a landing on a site such as Bryant Park.

Captain Conway also told the commission that New York Airways had experienced only two untoward "incidents" with the helicopter—a heater fire on the ground at La Guardia Airport and contact between the blades or two craft on the ground at Kennedy. He said neither incident could have happened in flight.

Several business and labor representatives voiced support for the flights, saying they would help the city's economy, making midtown office locations more attractive to executives by cutting the travel time between Grand Central and Kennedy to seven minutes.

An assertion that helicopter service would reduce vehicular congestion to and from the airports was disputed, however, by a Tudor City resident, Jerome Isaacs. He said that if the S-61's ran at 100 percent capacity for their full schedule, they would carry fewer than 1 percent of the passengers who use the three airports.

Community Boards 5 and 6 have voted to support the resumption of service.

Braniff Told to Pay $1 Million Penalty In Job Bias Claims

SAN ANTONIO, Nov. 24 (UPI)—A judge has told Braniff Airways to begin paying $1.1 million worth of penalties to employees involved in a job discrimination case.

The out-of-court settlement resolved the largest nationwide job discrimination suit filed under the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The suit was filed by minority employees against the airline and two unions.

Judge D. W. Suttle of the United States District Court, who approved the decree yesterday said he would retain jurisdiction in the case for five more years to make sure its provisions were carried out.

The settlement means that Braniff will pay $900,000 in direct payments ranging from $33 to $2,800 to 586 black and Spanish-surnamed employes of the airline, and also pay attorney fees.

Besides awarding $162,400 in compensatory damages and $797,600 in back pay, the decree set hiring and promotion goals for minority workers and established affirmative action measures and changes in the airline's personnel practices.

The suit was filed in 1973 by Frederick High and nine other Braniff employees. It complained that minorities were not being promoted in the airline's corporate system and were confined to lower-paying jobs.

Judge Suttle later ruled that the suit was a class-action matter after the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had entered the case on behalf of the minority employees.

Braniff, the International Association of Machinists and Areospace Workers, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters were named in the complaint on the ground their combined practices had discriminated in both hiring and promotion.

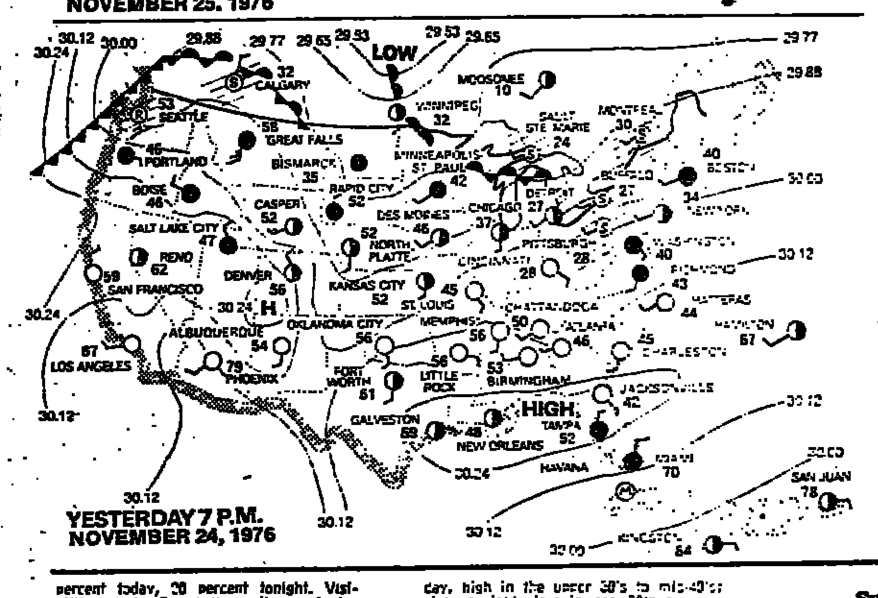
TODAY'S FORECAST 7 P.M. NOVEMBER 25, 1976



YESTERDAY 7 P.M. NOVEMBER 24, 1976

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

WMCA IS FINED $5,000 ON BARRY GRAY TALK

Promotion of Greek Tourism Cited, but Any Link to Suspension of Show Host Is Not Clear

By FRANK J. PRIAL

Scope/Vernon L. Smith

Barry Gray

Radio station WMCA was fined $5,000 earlier this year by the Federal Communications Commission for permitting Barry Gray, the talk-show moderator, to promote Greek tourism without logging his promotional remarks as commercials.

It was unclear yesterday what role, if any, that incident had played in the station's decision Sunday to suspend Mr. Gray for what it called "lack of candor" and for having "failed to disclose essential information." The station declined to elaborate beyond noting that Mr. Gray had been suspended indefinitely.

Mr. Gray said only that he was confident the problem would be resolved satisfactorily.

Asked of there was any connection between the fine and the suspension, Arthur Ginsburg, assistant chief of the F.T.C.'s complaint division said: "We never comment on anything under investigation."

The Greek National Tourist Office confirmed that Mr. Gray took a trip to Greece in November 1974 at its expense, then organized a tour to Greece, which he planned to lead, for the following spring.

"According to our records," said Ray Channaud, a spokesman for the Greek National Tourist Office, "Mr. Gray became ill and was unable to lead the tour. We take many journalists on these trips—there is nothing unusual about it. My understanding is that Mr. Gray had been in Greece on his own in 1973 and that's when he got interested in it."

WMCA would not comment specifically on Mr. Gray's statements about Greece. A lawyer who specializes in communications law said yesterday that Mr. Gray's free trip could be considered compensation for any statements about Greece he made on the air, even if they were made after the trip had been completed.

The statement by WMCA, issued by R. Peter Straus, its president, said Mr. Gray had neglected to "disclose essential information, which violates our established standards of conduct." He added: "Such lack of candor, in more than one instance, is not only unfortunate, it is unacceptable."

"Whether deliberate or not," Mr. Straus said, "it strikes at the heart of the responsible relationship between a broadcaster and the listening community."

The Barry Gray program, a fixture on WMCA for more than two decades, was being led this week by Gordon Hammett. The program is on the air from 10 P.M. to midnight, Sunday through Friday.

WABC Suspends Tex Antoine After a Light Remark About Rape

Tex Antoine, the WABC-TV weather reporter, was suspended indefinitely by network officials last night after he made an offhand remark on the air about rape.

The 53-year-old broadcaster was accused of "an inexcusable lapse in judgment" by the network officials. He later offered a public apology for what the officials called Mr. Antoine's "insensitive and offensive" comment during the evening newscast shortly before 7 P.M.

Mr. Antoine's comment, which occasioned a wave of protesting calls, came several minutes after a news item about an eight-year-old girl having been raped in Yonkers.

He attributed to the Chinese philosopher Confucius a statement that under some circumstances there was no choice but to enjoy being raped.

A station spokesman said that WABC-TV, in 25 minutes, received more than 665 telephone calls protesting the remark.

Mr. Antoine apologized on the air shortly after the remark, the network said, after he was requested to do so by Ron Tindinglia, the station's director of news and public affairs.

The tall and slim broadcaster, whose salary reportedly exceeds $100,000 a year, was the target of 100 protesting phone calls in February 1974 after he used an obscenity before a live microphone that was supposed to have been dead. He had just received a cake to celebrate his 25th anniversary as a television broadcaster.

Statement Issued

After last night's broadcast, a joint statement was issued by Mr. Tindinglia and Ken MacQueen, vice president and general manager of WABC-TV.

"Tex Antoine's extemperaneous comment on this evening's early news cast constituted an inexcusable lapse of judgment," the statement said. "We at WABC-TV felt it to be as insensitive and offensive as did our viewers and wish to apologize. We have suspended Tex Antoine indefinitely and the station's management will decide what further action is warranted. Eyewitness News and WABC-TV, again, wish to apologize to all our viewers."

Mr. Antoine, who has been a TV weather reporter since 1949, could not be reached immediately for comment on the decision to suspend him.

Solid-Waste Plant in Westchester Will Seek Steady Garbage Flow

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Nov. 24—Westchester County communities interested in joining a proposed countywide plan to convert solid waste into gas and electricity will be asked to sign contracts insuring a steady flow of garbage to the plant, County Executive Alfred B. DeBello said today.

The innovative conversion system, planned for construction beginning next year, will not work without a steady and predictable source of solid waste, Mr. DelBello said after a two-hour meeting with county legislators. "We won't go ahead with it without contractual commitments," he said.

Gerald Harris, the County Attorney, spoke of "put-or-pay" contracts under which communities would agree to "put up" an agreed amount of refuse to fuel the system or "pay" the cost of the missing garbage to keep costs from spiralling. Exceptions would be made for emergencies, such as failure to deliver because of snowstorms.

Mr. DelBello said he was asking the County Board of Legislators to approve the requirement for the put-or-pay contracts with the municipalities "within the next couple of months," or in advance of the initial design-stage deadline of April 1.

Communities ranging from populous cities along Westchester's southern tier to largely rural communities in the northern part of the county have expressed various forms of interest in the plan over the past year. Some municipalities have sought to explore alternative programs for disposal of garbage.

Various Forms of Interest

The contract deadline, if approved by the legislators, will pose difficult political choices, especially for those communities faced with incinerator improvements. To add to the problem, the Croton landfill is scheduled to close by 1981 and dumping garbage outside the county is becoming increasingly difficult because of space problems and environmental reasons.

Cities considering "go-it-alone" alternatives by upgrading their incinerators, most of which face closure in Westchester for pollution violations, would have to pay for the improvements themselves. The state assists in such upgrading only if the community joins a regional disposal program when available.

Mr. DelBello said he was prepared to recommend that the Union Carbide Corporation's Purox system of reducing garbage to gas and electricity be selected for use at the county-owned Grasslands Reservation in Valhalla. Fuel not used in the reservation's 30 buildings would be sold to Union Carbide, which has a plant nearby, or to the Consolidated Edison Company.

A second plant, slated to use a different but still unselected form of conversion, is scheduled to be built by private industry at a Yonkers site along the Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway.

U.S. Board Sees Catch In Bargain CB Radios

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP) — Shoppers who see citizens-band radios offered at big discounts this month should be wary, the Federal Trade Commission says.

More than half the CB sets on the market now will be partly obsolete next month, when the Government raises the number of CB channels from 23 to 40.

Some of the 23-channel sets for sale now can be converted to 40 channels. But about four million cannot. Those are the sets being offered now at attractive discounts, the trade commission said yesterday.

The 23-channel sets will still work after Jan. 1. However, they will not pick up or transmit over the 17 channels being added to accommodate increased CB use.

UNESCO Group Is Deadlocked Over Resolution on News Media

NAIROBI, Kenya, Nov. 24 (UPI)—A United Nations special committee was deadlocked today over the future of a controversial resolution that Western nations charge would lead to governmental control of news.

The general conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization extended the committee's deadline for reaching a compromise from last night until tomorrow.

Officials predicted that the 25-nation committee, created especially by the conference to handle controversial issues, would not reach a solution acceptable to all parties even by tomorrow's deadline.

The Soviet-inspired draft of the resolution says governments are responsible for mass media systems in their nations. The United States, West European and Nordic nations say the resolution will lead to direct control of the news media.
